THE UFFIZI GALLERY

The Uffizi Gallery was founded and unceasingly enlarged by the Medici. Although originally engaged in trade and industry, this family, even before it obtained the supreme power in Florence, did all in its power to encourage and foster the fine arts, science and literature.

The first of the Medici who collected at his own expense pictures and sculptures with which to adorn his private mansions and the city of Florence, was Cosimo of Giovanni, of Averardo, known as Pater Patriæ. His example was followed by Lorenzo the Magnificent, the first Grand-Duke Cosimo I, and the son of the latter, Francesco I. It is to Francesco that we may really attribute the formation of the Gallery. He took advantage of the great building which Cosimo I had projected to lodge all public offices; of which the foundations had been laid on Giorgio Vasari's plans in 1500. This building, Doric in style and rectangular in form, has porticoes where it starts from Palazzo Vecchio, ends at the Loggia d'Orcagna and is crowned by a terrace that runs along all three of its sides. It appeared to Francesco that the terrace on the eastern side of the palace, once it were shut in, would be a fitting place to receive the pictures, sculptures, and other artistic wealth that his ancestors had accumulated at their own expense, and which were now scattered among the various mansions of the family. He therefore entrusted the architect Bernardo Buontalenti with the duty of transforming the terrace into a gallery. Buontalenti executed his work well: he ornamented the place with marbles, had the ceiling painted by first-rate artists, and built other rooms on to the corridor, notably the octagonal one known as the Tribuna, which is paved with rich marbles and roofed by a dome inlaid with mother-of-pearl.

Ferdinand I, successor to Francesco I, still further enriched the gallery: he it was who bought in Rome the Venus known as the Venus of the Medici, the work of Cleomenes son of Apollodorus. The Grand-duke Ferdinand II caused the southern and western arms of the terrace to be covered in, thus adding two new corridors to the gallery. He also enriched it with many new treasures, among which should be specially mentioned the very interesting collection of cameos and gems. In this he was materially helped by the advice of his brother, the cardinal Leopold, to whom we owe the collection of drawings by old masters, and the beginning of that unique collection of portraits of Italian and foreign artists painted by themselves, to which additions are still being made.

Ferdinand II had a worthy successor in Cosimo III, who, besides buying medals and other antiquities, caused many sculptures to be removed from the Boboli Gardens to the Gallery, and enriched the Tribuna with the celebrated statues of the Venus of the Medici, the Knife-grinder, and the Wrestlers bringing them from his villa at Rome. After the death of Giovanni Gastone, last of the Medicean Grand-dukes, the Electress Palatine Anna Maria Luisa dei Medici, his sister and heir, bequeathed to Tuscany both the real and the personal property which she had inherited (including, of course, the Gallery, pictures, statues, libraries, gems and other precious objects), on condition that the rulers of Tuscany should preserve things as they then were, and should not remove from the Capital anything destined for public use.

The substitution on the throne of Tuscany of the house of Lorraine for that of the Medici did not interfere with the preservation and growth of the Gallery; for Francesco I enriched it with antiquities of great price, and Peter Leopold I, who succeeded him in 1765, continued the work of his predecessors, accumulating in it all the good paintings which were scattered here and there in the public offices. He restored the western corridor, 57 metres of which had been injured by fire, built new rooms, and threw open the Gallery to the public.

Little was done during the reign of Ferdinand III, on account of the political troubles which disturbed Europe at the end of last century and the beginning of this. But Ferdinand's son, Leopold II, extended the Gallery by building an immense hall to receive the Greek statues, illustrative of the Niobe myth, which cardinal Ferdinand dei Medici, afterwards Grand-duke, had bought to adorn his villa on the Pincio at Rome. Under Leopold II, too, the collection was enriched by the addition of 900 objects excavated in Thebes and Abydos; and the valuable collection of engravings was partially put into order. When, in 1859, the Grand-ducal government came to an end, and Tuscany was incorporated in the Kingdom of Italy, the new Government continued to enrich the Gallery with works of art and to improve the locale. In the first place a rational arrangement was attempted of the works of art, which had hitherto, it must be confessed been in a state of some confusion; and means were also sought of exhibiting to the public at least a part of those pictures etc., which, for want of space, were heaped up in the store-rooms. This was rendered possible by the founding of the National Museum in the Palazzo Pretorio; to which, in 1864, were sent the bronzes of Cellini, Donatello, Ghiberti and Giambologna, as well as the sculptures of Benedetto da Rovezzano and of Verrocchio, together with some basreliefs of Luca della Robbia. And in 1866, still with object of extending the exhibition of the works of art, it was resolved to open to the public that part of the corridor built by Cosimo I after the plans of Vasari, which, starting from the Uffizi Gallery, is carried over the Arno by the Ponte Vecchio, and thus joins the Uffizi with the Pitti Gallery. In this corridor a great number of drawings were arranged, a quantity of beautiful tapestries, some sketches by famous painters, and a collection of pictures of birds, quadrupeds, fishes and flowers painted in distemper by Bartolommeo Ligozzi. Later on, when the Archæological Museum was opened, the tapestries, to which many others were added, were carried thither, and arranged on the top floor, thus forming a special gallery; the drawings were placed in glass cases along the first and third corridors of the Uffizi Gallery; and Ligozzi's paintings were removed to the Natural History Museum. A series of portraits of the Medici, of noble Florentines, of men of science and of other famous personages filled up the space thus left empty in the corridor which connects the two Galleries. Even so, however, there was not sufficient space to exhibit many works of art which still remained in the store-rooms now to order those already exhibited on any reasonable principle. Many plans were therefore considered for increasing the locale, and it was proposed to erect a large building in which to collect all the objects from the galleries and museums, disposing them in logical and rational order; but financial reasons hindered the execution of this project. It was then thought that the Medicean theatre, underneath the Gallery, might be turned to account. In 1865 this theatre had been transformed into a hall for the meeting of the Senate, Florence being at that time the provisional seat of the Italian government; and it was now suggested to incorporate it with the Gallery. Plans, dividing into ten large rooms, were placed before the Minister of Public Instruction, and speedily approved. In the year 1890 the work was begun, and the new halls will be finished as soon as possible, thus rendering it practicable to arrange worthily and reasonably the precious collection of paintings that belongs to this Gallery.

PART THE FIRST

ANTIQUE SCULPTURES, GEMS, CAMEOS, ETC.

On the Stairs.

Some busts of a fine style.

Bacchus. A marble statue. Similar to that which is seen in the Museum in Rome, except that the stagskin which hangs from his shoulders and the position of his left arm is different. The pedestal is antique, and bears an inscription still in a good state of preservation.

First Vestibule.

Here the busts are collected of the various princes who have contributed to the Gallery or have later enriched it. Some of them are in porphyry, and were carved by means of a certain kind of very hard tempered steel, obtained by a special method, which is said to have been invented by Cosimo I, just for this purpose, in the year 1555. Battista del Tadda a Faesulan sculptor was the first to employ this, and the secret was then revealed to Raphael Curradi, who, after the model of Orathius Mochi, a pupil of Caccini, sculptured the bust of Cosimo II which is also here.

The Latin inscriptions which are on the base of each bust to indicate the role of the different Tuscan rulers in the formation and successive increase of the Gallery, were composed by the Abbot Lanzi, with the exception of that which is under the portrait of Leopold II, written by the Comm. Jean Grysostomus Ferrucci.

- I. Lorenzo il Magnifico, in marble.
- II. Cosimo I, in bronze.
- III. Francesco I, in marble.
- IV. Ferdinando I, in porphyry.
- V. Cosimo II, in porphyry.
- VI. Ferdinando II, the head alone, in porphyry.
- VII. Cardinale Leopoldo, in marble.
- VIII. Cosimo III, in marble.
- IX. Gio. Gastone, in marble.
- X. Ferdinando III, in marble.
- XI. Leopoldo II, in marble.
- XII. Vittoria della Rovere, in marble.
- XIII. Magdalene of Austria, in marble.

STATUES.

2. Mars Gradivus, a bronze statue larger than life. The figure is nude, with a helmet on its head, a stick in its right hand and a sword in its left. — It was taken from Rome, in 1788.

3. Silenus holding a little Bacchus on his arm: a group in bronze; an old cast from the original, which is kept at Rome in the Villa Pinciana.

This copy was brought from Rome in 1788. An ancient group similar to this, but in marble, is in the Louvre Museum at Paris.

Second Vestibule.

16, 17. Two quadrangular columns in marble, which seem to have been raised to celebrate the exploits of the personage to whom they were dedicated. They are all covered with carved figures of ancient arms of all kinds, musical instruments, flags, portable altars and in short every sort of old warlike utensils used in battles by sea or by land, or for religious purposes when marching or resting on battle fields. The carvings of these columns are quite in Roman style, but the form of the objects represented is Greek, and may be interesting to those who apply themselves to the study of ancient arms.

18. A marble horse (life size). It has been supposed to belong to the group of the Niobe family but it was discovered in a different place.

19. A marble boar (life size). Of this fine Greek work a copy is kept in the Louvre Museum, and another one in bronze made by Tacca adorns the fountain before the portico of Mercato Nuovo, in Florence.

20. Apollo, a statue larger than life. Holding a torch in his hand and looking upwards. The torso and right leg, which are the only ancient parts of it, have been spoiled by a modern attempt to restore it (perhaps with the intention of changing it, into a Prometheus, kindling his fire at the sun).

21. Adrian (larger than life). The simple and noble style of the drapery of this statue is particularly worthy of remark.

22. Trajan (larger than life) is clad in the armour proper to the Roman emperors. The cuirass is rich in ornaments of a most exquisite stile. It was brought from Rome, in 1789.

23. Augustus, haranguing (larger than life), holds a volume in his left hand; his drapery is exceedingly fine and minutely carried into detail, but not quite natural. The head is modern.

24, 25. Two dogs (life size).

26 to 33. Eight busts, five of which are of men and three of women.

34. Above the entrance-door, a bust of the Granduke Peter-Leopoldo, by Carradori.

First Corridor.

STATUES, BUSTS AND SARCOPHAGI.

37. Pompeus. A bust in marble (life size). He was son of Pompeus Strabo, being born in the year 648 A. U. C. and dying at the age of 59.

38. Hercules killing the Centaur Nesso. A marble group (life size). Hercules stands wearing his lion skin and parazonius on his left arm, with which he grasps the right arm of the Centaur, while he is catching hold of his hair with the other. The expression of pain seen on the monster's face is very remarkable.

The Hercules and the head of the Centaur are modern.

39. The different epochs in the life of a hero. A sarcophagus in marble. On the left side the birth is represented. The mother is sitting, looking at her child, who is held over a basin by its nurse. It is nude and looks up at a globe placed on a little column, on which Urania foretells the destiny of the newly born, while another woman is stretching her right hand to the globe, and holding a volume in the left. The education of the child is then seen. He is clad in a tunic, in the act of reading from a book, held before him by his tutor. A woman stands behind, bearing a tragical mask in her right hand. The fore-part of the sarcophagus represents the wedding. The cloth stretched behind the figures shows that the ceremony takes place in a room. The bride-groom is dressed in a toga holding a scepter in one hand, and the right hand of his bride in the other. The bride is veiled in the flammeum. Juno stands behind, placing her hands on their shoulders. Hymen is waving his torch, and a woman is seen standing by the bride and an old man by the bridegroom. A sacrifice is shown in the fourth bas-relief. The sacrificer, dressed in a tunic, stands before a temple, holding a palm in its left hand, and with the other pouring a liquor from a goblet (patera) on to an altar. Two attendants half naked, one of whom kneeling, keeps the head of a bull bent, while the other lifts his poleaxe to kill the animal. Behind the altar stands a player of a double flute (tibia). The fifth composition represents the hero after a victory. He stands on a stone, dressed in a tunic and mantle (clamys) in a field, followed by the personification of Victory. A nude boy and a woman dressed in a tunic are before him in a suppliant attitude; behind them stands a soldier with lance in hand. Then a hunting party is represented, by an elderly man mounted on a horse and bearing a spear in his right hand, followed by another on horse-back equally armed; two hounds run before them towards a wild boar standing by a rock. The last section contains the figure of the hero in old age, sitting at a door, clad in a cuirass, and holding a long spear. A soldier kneeling takes off one of his greaves; the other having been already taken off is seen lying on the ground with two shields. Another soldier is standing with a sword unsheated in his hand. At the back of the sarcophagus the following inscription is written: « ROMANUS ROMULUS. »

40, 42, 47. Three busts representing Augustus in different ages. The number 40 however has exactly the features described by Suetonius. The hair is a little crisp, the brows are thick and meet; the ears are small and well shaped; the nose is prominent and slightly hooked.

41. Julius Caesar. A bust with a bronze head. Its features are very like those of this emperor in the most authenticated medals, but the antiquity of this bust is however doubtful. Julius Caesar was born in Rome in July, 654th A. U. C. 100 years before the Christian era. He was the son of Lucius Julius Caesar and Aurelia and was not only a great warrior but was also a great promoter of the fine arts, and several of the ancient Roman Museums were founded by him. This bust may have been made before he obtained from the Senate the privilege of wearing the laurel crown; a privilege which was the dearer to him (as they say), because it served to hide his baldness which he much disliked to show in public.

43. Julius Caesar. Another bust in marble. The antiquity of this one is certain.

44. Atys. A statue larger than life. A modern restorer intended to change it into a barbarian king; its torse however, which is old, clearly indicates its primitive subject.

45. Proserpine, the daughter of Jupiter and Ceres ravished by Pluto. A sarcophagus. At the two extremities are two personifications of Victory bearing flowers and fruits in the folds of their dresses, which they spread like aprons before them. Between them, to the left, is a figure of Mercury, naked, except his shoulders which are covered by a mantle (clamys). He bears the caduceus, and holds the reins of Pluto's horses, galloping over a figure lying with the cornucopia in its left hand, representing the Earth. Above is a flying cupid, holding his torch. Pluto is in his chariot and holds the desolate Proserpine with both his arms bound. Minerva stands before him and seem to reproach him, while three girls stand by her near an altar, one of them holding up Minerva's shield before the goddess, in order to calm her. Then Ceres is figured, with a torch in her left hand, on a chariot, dragged by serpents: a man follows the chariot, beneath whom a woman is lying, her elbow leaning on a crater. On the left side of the sarcophagus is Mercury, leading a veiled woman to Hades; on the right, Hercules calling another veiled woman out of the tartarean gates. — This sarcophagus belonged to the Michelozzi family, who purchased it in 1787.

46. Livia, a bust. This princess who possessed an extraordinary beauty and wit but a corrupt heart and mind, was the daughter of Livius Drusus Callidianus, a descendent of the illustrious family of the Claudiuses. Several provinces honoured her by coining medals to her with the adulatory titles of Mater Patriæ and Genitrix orbis, which Rome never granted to her.

48. Marcus Agrippa, son in law of Augustus. The head of this bust is splendid and wonderfully represents what Tacitus narrates about this illustrious man.

49. Julia, daughter of Augustus was first the wife of Agrippa and then of the emperor Tiberius. She possessed the most admirable beauty, and Domitianus had her represented in the form of a goddess. This bust and that of Agrippa belong to the best epoch of the Roman sculpture.

50. Tiberius, was born in the year 712 A. U. C. (42 A. D.), and was the son of Tiberius Claudius Nero and Livia. This bust appears to have been made in the first years of his reign, as his dissolute, cruel, and turbulent life, while he was on the throne, altered his look entirely and his face was all spotted with blains in his latter years. He died at the age of 78, having reigned for 22 years.

51. The god Pan with the young Olympus. A marble group (life-size). The whole figure of Olympus is modern, and the right arm of the satyr is partly restored. — Come from Rome in 1788.

52. Athlete. A statue (larger than life). He is naked, except his left arm wrapped in his clamys or ephaptides, which hangs from it. The head is a little turned to be right, and the arm raised. The half of this is modern.

53. Antonia, a bust. She was a daughter of Marcus Antonius and Ottavia the sister of Augustus and mother of Claudius. The sculptor has perfectly succeeded in representing in this bust, by a remarkable sweetness of features and modesty in the expression of the eyes, the well known merits of this matron, whom Caligola himself honoured with the proud title of Augusta, granting to her the honours due to Vestals.

54. Drusus, was a brother of Tiberius: his life was glorious but short, as he died at the age of 39, in consequence of a fall from a horse.

55. Agrippina. She was the wife of Germanicus and mother of Caligula. The high and noble feelings which adorned the mind of this virtuous empress, are well expressed in her features.

56. Hippolytus. The front-side of this sarcophagus is divided into two parts by the pillar of a gate, and represents two different subjects, one of which is the temptation of Hippolytus; the other is Hippolytus hunting a wild boar. The first part bears the figure of Phaedra sitting among some girls, one of whom is tearing her own hair, and another one bears a volume in her hands; a young cupid is before her holding his torch in his right hand and his quiver in his left. The old nurse is speaking to Hippolytus, but he turns his back upon her. He wears a clamys and holds a spear in his left hand. Behind him is a hunter standing with his right arm placed on the neck of a horse, and his left grasping a spear. Another hunter follows him, with two hounds. Beyond the pillar is Hippolytus naked, on horse back, accompanied by another horseman; both followed by Diana, hunting a stag. Then Hippolytus is seen hunting a wild boar. On the right side of the sarcophagus Hippolytus is represented in the act of making a drink offering to Diana, by pouring a liquor on a fire kindled upon an altar. On the other side is a hunter holding a hound by the collar.

57. Drusus, a bust. He was the son of Tiberius and Vespania Agrippina: he was assassinated by his own wife Livilla.

58. Victory, a life size statue. She wears a tucked dress, loose on her shoulders, one of which is uncovered. Her mantle is gathered on her left arm; her head is diademed; her right hand is raised and holds a laurel crown; while the other bears a palm. This statue has no wings, and this shows that it was made in the epoch when the Roman armies were already victorious everywhere, so that Victory could no longer fly from them; just as an Italian writer once said, about a statue similar to this, which a thunderbolt had deprived of its wings: « Roma, regina delle Nazioni, il tuo nome sarà immortale; la Vittoria non può fuggirti (1). » — The right arm, the left hand and the neck are modern. It was given as a present to Francis I of the Medicis by Card. Lezio.

59. Athlete. Life size. He is naked and standing. He has a vial in his arms, looking at it stedfastly. His right leg is leaning on the trunk of a palm-tree, from which some dates are hanging. — Both arms have been mended.

60. Caesar Britannicus, a bust. He was the son of Claudius and Messalina, and brother to Nero, who had him poisoned after having deprived him of his rights to the throne.

(1) O Rome queen of nations, thy name is immortal, and Victory can no longer fly from thee.

61. Caius Caesar Caligula. The perfidy and cruelty of this emperor's mind are well expressed in this bust, which is so much more precious as the tribune Cassius Cherea who delivered Rome from this tyrant, ordered all his statues, busts and medals to be destroyed, in order to disperse any record of his disgraceful reign.

62. The Dioscures. Sarcophagus. It is related that Ida and Lynceus sons of Amphareus of Messenes were the lovers of Thebea and Ilaria daughters of Leucippus. Castor and Pollux sons of Jupiter (the Dioscures) also fell in love with them and ravished them; whence the hatred among the pretenders. This is the subject of this sarcophagus. The two corners of its front side are decorated with two personifications of Victory. Between them the rape of Leucippus' daughters is represented as follows: Each one of the Dioscures bears his beloved on his shoulders; they are both naked or simply clad in their clamides. One of the girls, dressed in a tunic, presses her right hand on her ravisher, striving to escape from him, while a woman runs to help her. The other girl is grasping her mother Philodices' mantle trying to detain her who is flying away with her husband. All these people are pursued by Ida, Amphareus' eldest son, who is rushing after the rival of himself and brother; but Lynceus prudently tries to stop him by opposing his shield to him. The left side of the sarcophagus bears the figure of a naked man with clamys, and a woman whose hand he holds. Behind this is an urn upon a pedestal. A curtain is spread behind the figures. On the other side is a man standing, with his left hand upon an altar; a woman stands by the opposite side of the altar, laying her right hand upon it. Behind her is an urn upon a pillar. — This sarcophagus has been mended in different parts. It was brought from Rome in 1788.

63. Valeria Messalina, a bust in alabaster with marble head. This empress was the wife of Claudius and is famous on account of her licentiousness and cruelty. Tacitus has described her life and tragical death.

64. Claudius. The dulness and poverty of soul of this emperor, which rendered him despicable to every body, and of which he was himself the victim, are well expressed in this bust. His reign lasted 13 years and 20 days.

65. Claudius Domitianus Nero, a bust in basalt. This tyrant reigned 13 years and 8 months.

66. Faun, a statue. He is standing and crowned with vine-leaves and ivy, and is looking at a bunch of grapes which he holds in his right hand. A little panther is at his feet, with one of its paws around the trunk of a vine. The right arm and the neck are modern.

67. Atlete, a statue larger than life. He holds a small lance high in his left hand, while he keeps a wand in the other, partly wrapped in a cloth. His right leg is leaning on the trunk of a palm-tree. — Both the arms and a part of the left leg are modern.

68. The Labours of Hercules, a sarcophagus on which eight different subjects are represented. The first is the slaughter of the Nemean lion. Hercules is naked, crowned with vine-leaves, and drags the dead lion along on the ground. The second is the fight of the hero with the hydra of Lerna. He holds his club high in his right hand, and with the other he presses one of the four serpents springing from the head of the hydra. The third is Hercules bearing the wild-boar of Erymanthus on his shoulders: under the head of the beast Eurystheus half hidden in the bronze Dalius is lying, with his hands raised. In the fourth composition the hero is naked, and grasps the horns of the Cerinean hind, pressing at the same time its back with his knee. In the following one he is bearded, and darts his arrows against the Stymphalides, one of whom has already fallen dead; the other is wounded. The sixth group represents Hercules also naked and armed with his club, in the act of taking away the girdle from the waist of Hyppolita, the queen of the Amazones, who is lying down on her shield. Then he is seen again, clad in his lion skin, his right hand raised and his left grasping the club. Above his left shoulder a spring of water is falling from a rock. This is supposed to represent the cleansing of the Augean stables. The last group which is on the left extremity of the urn, represents Hercules vanquishing the Maratonean bull. The hero is nude and grasps the left horn and the right leg of the beast, while he keeps his left foot upon the head of a horse. Another horse of which the head and fore-legs alone are visible is lying a little aside. These two animals signify Hercules' victory over Diomedes's horses. This sarcophagus has been mended in several parts.

69. Poppea. She was Nero's wife or mistress; the finest woman in her time, as may be seen from the delicate features of this bust.

70. Nero, a bust. Its modelling is remarkably good, as well as its expression of the perfidy and cruelty of this emperor who so soon forgot his own utinam nescirem. His hair is divided into curls, after the fashion he had taken from Grece, as Suetonius relates.

71. Nero in his childhood. Its countenance is sweet and quite different from the aspect represented in the other bust. This is rightly considered one of the most precious in the collection.

72. Galba. This bust is a clever work, but rather defective as a representation of his moral character. This emperor reigned six months, and therefore his busts are rare. He was killed in a mutiny raised by his rival Otho's friend, and his head was cut from his body and sold to a freed slave (libertus) who bought it in order to insult it before the tomb of his master whom Galba had caused to be executed.

73. Hercules labours. A sarcophagus similar to N° 68.

74. Pomona. A nimble figure, the head of which is crowned with fruits and ivy. A part of its gown is lifted by both hands, and full of grapes and different kind of fruits. The hands, feet and part of the gown are modern.

75. An Athlete. Similar to the N^r 52, 59. The hands have been mended in several parts.

76. Julia. Titus' daughter and wife of Flavius Sabinus. Domitian, her uncle, having fallen in love of her, had her husband killed and repudiated his own wife, in order to marry her. — The head alone.

77. Otho, a bust. He succeeded Galba on the throne of Rome, but Vitellius was almost at the same time elected by the legions he led in Germany, so that a civil war arose and the two competitors met with their armies in France and then in the valley of the Pô where forty thousand people died in one battle, to support the ambition of two men. The day after that awful havoc Otho killed himself in order to stop the civil war, as the best historians affirm, so that his death was lamented by his subjects, and his name was honoured. He held his scepter not longer than three months, and died in 69 A. D. aged 37. He was quite bald and wore a small round wig, with short and crisped hair. — As to the artistic value of this bust, Winckelmann says it is one of the finest ever seen.

78. A sarcophagus decorated with various figures of Nereides, Tritons, Delphins, and winged cupids, carrying baskets full of fruit and flowers. The natural grain of the stone being bluish here and there seems to imitate the sea waves.

79. Julia, Titus' daughter. This bust is admirably well done and preserved.

80. Vitellius. This bust corresponds exactly to the description of this emperor's aspect left by Suetonius, and gives a perfect idea of his famous addiction to gluttony and every excess in banqueting.

81. Urania, or perhaps Geometry or Astronomy, after the modifications which it must have undergone in various restorations. Its very clever and fine drapery renders this statue most remarkable. Its size is a little larger than life. The right arm and a half of the left one, as well as the feet and the hem of the garment are modern.

82. Ariadne, a statue larger than life. She is crowned with laurels and vine leaves, and holds a bunch of grapes in her right hand. Her left foot rests upon a part of a tripod which stood once by her side. This statue is much similar to one in the Museum at Rome, which is now called a Ceres, since a bundle of ears has been put in her hand, in a recent restoration. The two arms and a part of the neck are modern.

83. Julia, Titus' daughter. The head alone.

84. Sarcophagus. Sea deities, two of which are supporting a shield which was probably destined to bear an inscription.

85. Vespasianus. The head is carved with admirable skill and its lineaments well represent the magnanimity of this emperor. His forehead is wrinkled, the eyes are rather hollow, but not stern looking, the nose is hooked, the face oval, and in short his physiognomy bears an expression of great dignity, in every part. His reign lasted ten years.

86. Domitia, wife of Lucius Elios Lamia, a Roman senator, and then of Domitianus. The dressing of her hair is that which they called galericula, on account of its resemblance to a helmet. This bust also is precious as a work of art.

87. Titus, son of Vespasianus. The majesty, beauty, greatness of mind and benevolent disposition which characterized this prince and caused him to be a lasting source of happiness to the whole civilized world, are cleverly expressed on this precious piece of marble. Of his busts several copies have been repeated, but they are nevertheless rare, because of the short duration of his reign, which did not last longer than two years and two months.

88. Ganymedes. The size of the figure is as large as life, but the eagle with which it is grouped is rather gigantic. The work is fine but its artistic value is not easily perceived on account of many spots in the marble. — The head, and arms, and also a part of the eagle are modern.

89. Sarcophagus. The nine Muses with Apollo. It is much wasted by age. — Clio, crowned with laurel bears a volume and a trumpet; Erato, crowned with flowers, the double pipe and a mask, Calliope, a volume; Urania a sphere; Melpomene is to be recognised from the mask and club she holds, according to what Aristophanes says, that Tragedy was sacred to Hercules; Apollo, almost naked, stands by her left side, with his tripod and snake; then Euterpe comes and then Therpsicore. The following one leaning at a column is very likely Thalia. The last one is Polymnia.

90. A Vestal. The base bears the name of Lucilla. She is holding a cup in one of her hands, while the other is stretched towards the sacred fire placed by her right side. Her face has a pleasing expression of modesty and her figure is noble and beautiful. Her attitude is like that of the vestals seen on medals. Her hair is dressed under a veil, and this might put an end to the dispute held among the archaeologists, whether the Vestals used to let their hair grow again after having had it cut. The celebrated Lanzi supposes it to be a Plautina. The state of preservation of this statue is remarkable. Its left hand alone and the fingers of the right have been restored.

91. Domitia; a bust not so fine as N. 86.

92. Domitian. This bust does not represent that expression of a strong mind and that beauty which is seen in some medals; which may be caused by having tried to restore it after another bust of this emperor, not authentic.

93. Nerva. His nobility of mind, by which he was raised to the throne of Rome, is well shown in this bust. It is a little larger than life.

94. Domitia. A bust little larger than the other two of this empress: N. 86 and 91.

95. Sarcophagus, on which the Chase of Meleager is represented. This subject is repeated on several Etruscan sarcophagi. It was probably chosen as an allusion to the extinction of the flame of life or to commemorate the exploits of a hero. Meleager was the son of Oeneus king of Calidonia and nephew of Elimus king of the Tyrrenians. A monstrous boar which used to waste Anceus' vineyard was killed by him, with the help of Theseus, Jaso, Pirithous, Castor, Pollux and the nymph Athalanta. She wounded it and Meleager killed it by a second wound on its shoulder, and then gave its skin to Athalanta as a trophy. Pisippus and Theseus, brothers, to Althea and uncles to Meleager, indignant at seeing such an honour paid to a girl, robbed her of the skin, whereupon Meleager killed both, and married Athalanta, by whom he then had a son whose name was Parthenope. Altea became mad, when she knew of the death of her two brothers, of which she revenged herself on her own son, by throwing on the fire the fatal brand on the perseveration of which Meleager's life depended. The hero felt his entrails burnt, as soon as the brand was on the fire, and expired when it was reduced to ashes. The basrelief on the left side of the sarcophagus represents a monument to Meleager.

96. Trajan. This bust is the finest of the three of this emperor in this gallery. He was born at Italica in Spain and was the first foreigner raised to the throne in Rome. Under his empire which lasted nineteen years and six months many Spaniards settled in Rome, thus filling the void left by the dispersion of several Roman families under Nero and Vespasian.

97. The Muse Calliope. Several parts of this statue are modern, viz, half of the right arm, the left hand, and the feet with all the lowest part of the figure.

98. Trajan. A bust. Smaller than life.

99. Hercules. The pedestal is antique and the subject on it analogous to the exploits of this hero. This statue was made to stand isolated. It is one of the best copies of the famous Hercules by Glyco (Ercole Farnese). The head is very expressive and the torso is fine and very well preserved. Pausania speaks of a statue similar to this, which existed in Attica. In a medal of Massimianus is also a figure of Hercules much resembling this. Both the arms are modern. This statue was sent from Rome to this gallery in 1788.

100. Marciana, sister to Trajan.

101. Trajan, a colossal bust.

102. Marciana, another bust.

103. Plotina, the wife of Trajan, This empress was very modest and this perhaps the reason of her busts being very rare. This one is also a splendid work of art.

104. The Muse Polyhymnia, entirely wrapped in her mantle. The drapery is fine but not very carefully carved. The hand is new.

105. Sarcophagus. The case of Meleager, very similar to N. 95.

106. Mercury. A statue larger than life. His right leg is leaning on the broken trunk of a palm; his right arm is raised with a purse in the hand; the other hand is modern.

107. Matidia, daughter of Marciana, niece of Trajan and grand mother of Adrian. This bust has not a great artistic value, and has been much restored.

108. Adrian. The head is fine; the hair is carefully dressed and the beard is long and thick, which was very uncommon in that time and is said to have been used by this emperor in order to hide some scar he had on his cheek. This bust is splendid and affords a good idea of the state of the Art under this emperor.

109. Adrian. Another bust representing this emperor much younger.

110. Sarcophagus, on which the triumph of Bacchus is represented. Some chained slaves precede Arianna's chariot which two tigers are drawing: while that of Bacchus is drawn by two centaurs, male and female. The figure standing by Bacchus is Acratos. A winged Victory precedes the chariot, and some cupids, fauns and menades follow it.

111. Elius Caesar; adopted by Adrian and destined to be his successor if he had survived him. He was handsome and inspired veneration by his noble aspect, notwithstanding his feeble health. This bust well represents the beauty of his features as well as the nobleness of his mind.

112. Venus with a little Cupid bearing a reversed torch in his hand. The torches which are often seen in the hands of figures representing Venus or Cupid are a symbol of the passion which these two divinities kindle in the hearts of men. The arms and a part of the right leg of the goddess are modern.

113. Venus. This statue formerly represented a victorious Venus and held an apple in its right and, as it is seen from an engraving in the Museo fiorentino, 3^d table. Hercules Ferrata had it restored in 1557, and the arms which are stucco were then made in the attitude of those of the Venus de Medici. It is a little larger than life. The head is antique, but it probably belonged to another statue.

114. Sabina, wife of Adrian, and daughter of Matidia. This bust is fine and very carefully executed.

115. Antoninus Pius; a splendid bust, quite like the heads in the different medals and old statues of this excellent prince, which are very numerous. His reign lasted 22 years and six months.

116. Faustina, the mother. A bust remarkable for its artistic value and perfect preservation.

117. Faustina. Another bust.

119. Apollo, with the serpent. A statue larger than life and very fine in its antique parts; but the attitude given to the right arm which is all new, is very different from the original one, which certainly was the same that is seen in all the statues representing Apollo Lycius, and just as it is in that which was once at Versailles and is now in the Parisian Museum. The restored parts of this statue are: the head, the right arm, a half of the left one, and portions of the legs.—It was taken into this gallery in 1794.

120. Galerius, the son of Antoninus, in his childhood. He died about the age of 15. — A bust.

121. Apollo, with a sea-bird at his feet; a statue larger than life. The head is old but does not belong to this statue. Both the arms, and the left foot are modern.

122. Annius Verus, the son of Marcus Aurelius. A child about seven years old, who died just at this age.

Second Corridor.

123. Cupid. A statue larger than life, in a very queer attitude. — Both the arms are modern.

124. Two Children wrestling, one of whom is lifting the other by the waist. The right hand of one of the two is modern.

125. Morpheus or Sleep; a lying statue with wings at its head and feet, and two poppies in its left hand. A lizard is at its feet, according to ancient belief, that such little reptiles used to watch by persons asleep, and to wake one, whenever a venemous animal approached. The right foot and a part of the left one are modern.

126. A child dressed in a short tunic, in a fold of which he has some walnuts. He represents very likely one of those who used to scatter walnuts at weddings. The lowest parts of the legs are modern.

127. A child winged and lying on a sleeping lion. It is probably a symbol of Love. The right knee and foot are modern.

128. Bacchante, dancing. A leopard is at her feet: her dress which is light and waving in the wind makes the whole figure lively and pleasing. The half of both the arms is new.

36. A Roman matron, similar to N. 35. The head is probably modern.

131. Faustina, the young wife of Marcus Aurelius. She was deified, and took the title of Mater Castorum.

132. Annius Verus. Much finer than the other bust

N. 122. Without any fear of exaggeration this bust and that of the little Nero may be considered the finest busts of children ever seen.

133. Minerva, a statue in the antique greek style, but much restored. — The arms are modern, the head is antique, but it probably belonged to another statue.

3. Young Athlete, or Doryphorus of Polyclethus.

135. Faustina. Another bust of the same.

136. Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, the philosopher. There are four busts of this personage in different ages. This one seems to belong to the time in which he was adopted by Antoninus; that is to say between 15 and 20. His reign lasted 19 years and 10 months.

137. An altar. It is round and its top is hollow, with some holes around its edge. It was formerly believed that the bas-relief which adorns it represented Alcestes saving her husband Admetus from death, by sacrificing herself for his sake, since Apollo had obtained from the Fates that Admetus' life should be prolonged, provided a voluntary victim were sacrificed for him. His wife Alcestes was the victim, but Hercules took her back from Hades, to restore her to her husband. The veiled figure was supposed to represent the revived Alcestes. It is now thought that this figure may represent Iphigenia led to the place where she is to be sacrificed. Agamemnon is veiled and one of the priests is cutting the hair of the intended victim. The following figure represents the people as it is shown by the word laos, written behind it. The work is of an antique Greek style, and a Greek inscription which is under the base of this monument, says that it was made by Cleomenes.

138. A nude boy, called il Giovine della spina. This charming figure is often found in bronze or on engraved stones. He has been pricked by a thorn in one of his feet and looks at it with great attention. It is supposed to represent a conqueror in the Olympic games. The hands, the left foot, and a part of the right one are modern.

139. Marcus Aurelius. This bust was probably made about the end of the reign of this emperor. It is very expressive and the beard and hair, rather rough, are very well executed.

140. Marcus Aurelius. Another bust with a shorter beard. It is considered one of the finest in this collection.

320. The Genius of death, or Sleep. The restorer has misunderstood the subject, reducing this statue to a Cupid, by putting a bow in its hand, instead of the inverted torch.

141. Pedestal of a candelabrum, which was dedicated to Mars, as is shown by the bas-relief which adorns it representing six genii carrying the arms of the god. Upon this pedestal is placed a little triangular altar adorned with three figures of women, in very shallow relief. The upper part of this is restored. — It was brought from Rome in 1788. In the Louvre Museum there is an antique pedestal like this, but a little smaller.

150. A nude boy, standing, supposed to represent Nero in his childhood. It is remarkable for its artistic value and perfect preservation.

142. Minerva or Pallas Athene. A statue in a fine Greek style. The head which is not one piece with the torso, is antique however, but probably not its own. The right arm and a part of the neck are modern.

129. Sarcophagus. The fall of Phaeton. The figure of Phaeton falling headlong into the Eridanus is in the middle of the bas-relief, with the Heliades, his sisters, changed into poplars.

On the back of this sarcophagus in a very shallow bas-relief a race in a circus is represented, particularly remarkable, as it bears inscriptions giving the names of the chariots which take part in the race (Libyo, Jubilatore, Dicatesyne, Eugrammo) as well as those of the drivers written by the heads of each: (Liber, Polyphemus, Trofimion). The name of the fourth driver is wanting, but some interpreters have supposed it was Entyones.

130. A colossal head, placed on this sarcophagus. A fragment of a figure representing a river.

143. Lucius Verus. He shared the supreme power with his brother Marcus Aurelius in the throne of Rome. Capitolinus says he was as immoderate and debauched as Caligula, Nero and Vitellius. He reigned nine years with his brother.

144. Lucius Verus. Another bust.

149. Young Bacchus, sitting by a vine and plucking off a bunch of grapes, while he is holding a cup in his left hand. — The arms and a part of the left leg are modern.

145. Venus Anadyomene (Venus' birth from the sea). The head, the arms and the left leg are modern. A similar statue is at Rome, and one in the Museum at Paris; both equally antique.

146. A Nymph extracting a thorn from her foot. The head the right hand and the feet are modern. The original part of the statue is a very good specimen of antique Greek art.

147. Commodus, son of Marcus Aurelius and Faustina. His weakness of mind which made him so unworthy of sitting on the throne, is well expressed in his features. His busts are rare, as the Senate ordered them all to be destroyed, in order to wipe out even the memory of that tyrant. He reigned 12 years and nine months.

148. Marcus Aurelius. The fourth bust of this emperor.

134. Venus, in the act of girding on Mars' sword. The head, the feet and the vase covered by a cloth are modern.

151. Lucilla, daughter of Marcus Aurelius and Faustina, whom she resembled in her luxurious life.

152. Lucius Verus. The third bust of this emperor.

35. A Roman matron recumbent on a seat is leaning on her left elbow. She is supposed to represent Agrippina, the mother of Nero, from her likeness to the portrait of that empress, which is kept in the Farnesian gardens (Orti Farnesiani). This statue was bequeathed to the Granduke Gio. Gastone by signor Andreini.

Third Corridor.

153. Crispina, wife of Commodus. This bust represents the empress in her most flourishing age, not long after her marriage.

154. Commodus. A second bust of this emperor.

155. Marsyas. A nude statue larger than life. It is hung on the trunk of the tree. It is believed to have been restored by Donatello. The half of both arms are modern. A statue like this is in the Louvre Museum.

156. Marsyas. A statue similar to the preceding one, and restored by Verrocchio. The head, the arms and a part of the shoulders are restaurations. The original parts are in a kind of marble, the colour of which imitates that of the flesh.

157. Pertinax. A long bearded venerable old man, with rough hair, broad shoulders, and majestic look. He reigned not longer than three months.

158. Manlia Scantilla, the wife of Didius Julianus.

159. Didius Julianus. This bust represents him just as the best historians describe him. He was dissolute even in his old age: he became emperor simply by buying that dignity, which he soon lost with his life.

160. Didia Clara, the only daughter of Didius Julianus and Manlia Scantilla.

161. Pescennius the Negro. He competed for the imperial dignity with Septimius Severus, who soon conquered him, near Antiochia. — It is doubtful whether this bust is antique.

162. Nereid on a sea horse. This group is important on account of the subject which is very rarely treated. — The feet of the nymph and the two legs of the horse are modern.

163. Septimius Severus; a lively and fine head, which is a proof of the wonderful skill of some artists in that time. He reigned 17 years and 8 months.

164. Julia Domna; the wife of Septimius and mother of Geta and Caracalla. She is represented in this bust, with all that beauty, grace and majesty which rendered her so famous in Roma and Syria.

165. Septimius Severus. Another bust.

166. Julia Domna. Another bust of the same empress, in the age in which she had lost something of her peculiar beauty, but not her noble and dignified look.

167. Albinus, who competed with Severus for the throne of Rome, and kept the title of Augustus for several years. This bust is in alabaster, and this peculiarity makes it particularly remarkable.

168. Antony Caracalla. This surname was given to him on account of his being used to wear a gallic dress just called Caracalla. This bust represents this emperor at the time when he had lost that courteous countenance and those graceful features, which had formerly rendered him so dear to the people and Senate. It is a fine work of art, and so much more remarkable, as it is rare to find one so good in an epoch which was called the last breath of the Roman Art, as it just preceded the decay which it had to suffer under the reign of Adrian. Caracalla reigned six years and two months.

169. Discobolus. A splendid specimen of the grand style of the antique Greek art. It was formerly believed to be one of Niobe's sons, but Visconti thinks it is an antique copy of the Discobolus from Miro. — The hands, a part of the right leg and the trunk on which the other leg is leaning, are new.

170. Hygea, the goddess of health and companion to Esculapius. She is feeding a serpent. Her drapery and the dressing of her hair are to be remarked. — The neck with a part of the head, a half of the left arm and a part of the right one are modern.

171. Plautilla; the wife of Caracalla: in her prime. A bust.

172. A Cippus, with an inscription.

173. Geta, the brother of Caracalla, who stabbed him, in the arms of their own mother Julia Domna.

174. Plautilla; another bust.

175. Geta ; another bust.

176. A Cippus, with an inscription.

177. Apollo. He is resting and has one of his feet on a tortoise. — The legs and the left arm are modern, and the head also is probably not antique.

178. Jupiter, with a thunderbolt in his right hand, as a sign of his power over men and gods. The figure is partly clad in a mantle, which gives it a character of great majesty. The right arm and the feet are modern.

179. Another Cippus, with inscription.

180. Geta. Another bust, representing him in his youth.

181. Macrinus, who conspired against Caracalla and was his successor. He reigned during one year and two months, with his son Diadumene.

182. Macrinus, another bust in which the beard is a little different from that of the other, just as it is in other portraits of this emperor as seen in some medals.

183. Diadumene, in his childhood.

184. A Cippus, with an inscription.

185. A Cippus, with masks carved on two opposite sides. Such cippi were used as a sign in theatrical performances.

186. A wounded soldier, leaning on his left knee, while the right thigh is pierced by an arrow, a part of which is thrust in the wound. It represents a foreign soldier, as there is nothing Roman in the dress. The arms, a part of the neck, the shield and the feet are modern.

187. Juno : remarkable for a peculiar expression of majesty. — The arms and feet are modern.

188. Macrinus. Another bust.

189. Cippus, with an inscription.

190. Marcus Aurelius Antoninus Heliogabalus. He was a very handsome youth but so dissolute and cruel that he was considered the most disgraceful of the worst tyrants who ever sat on the throne of Rome. He was only 14 years old when he ascended the throne, and was killed after three years and nine months of reign, in 222 A. D.

191. Diadumene, in his childhood. A bust.

192. Alexander Severus, the son of Julia Mammea, by whose counsels he demeaned himself so wisely on the throne, and with whom he was assassinated by his own soldiers in Germany. This bust well represents his majestic look and natural kindness of disposition. He is clad in a scaly cuirass.

193. A Cippus, with an inscription.

194. Apollo. He is nude and sitting, and holds a lyre, which is very remarkable on account of its having five cords. — The neck, arms and right foot as well as the serpent are modern.

195. Leda. This statue has great artistic value, but unluckily some stains in the marble hinder one from admiring all the beauty of the work. The face is very expressive and the forms of the breast are beautiful: the drapery is of the best Greek style. — The right arm and the feet are modern. — It was given to Francis I de' Medici from Cardinal Lezio.

196. Julia Aquilea Severa, a Vestal whom Heliogabalus married declaring it right that the wife of a priest of the Sun should be a Vestal. This bust represents her before she had left her primitive state.

197. A Cippus, with an inscription.

198. Alexander Severus. This bust is superior to the other (N. 192) in artistic value. His dress is that which was called laticlavium. The busts of this emperor are rare: even the Museum in Rome had but one, which had been dug out at Ortricoli.

199. Julia Mesa; the sister of Julia Septimius Severus' wife, who contributed to raise her grandchild Heliogabalus to the throne by means of much craftiness. This bust represents her in rather old age.

200. A Cippus, with an inscription.

201. Maximinus. He was a barbarian by birth and very daring and uncommonly strong. He was eight feet and two inches tall. He reigned two years, with his son.

202. Apollo. A standing statue. The arms, the lower part of the legs, the lyre and the drapery are modern. The few antique parts are very beautiful.

203. A Cippus, with inscription.

204. Esculapius. A statue similar to that which is in the Public Gallery in Rome (See Museo Chiaramonti, 2d vol., tab. IX, page 25). The sandals are to be remarked on account of their peculiar fashion and good state of preservation. — The right arm with the wand and serpent are modern.

205. Olimpus. A sitting statue similar to that which is in the group of Pan with Olympus (N. 51). The pipes of his instrument are sixteen in number. — The left arm, the right hand and the point of the right foot are modern.

206. A Cippus, with inscription.

207. The forepart of a pedestal, with a Greek inscription.

208. Bacchus, in a group with Ampelus or Acratos. He holds a cup with his right hand and rests the other on the head of the little Ampelus, who is sitting on an urn, embracing Bacchus' right leg. On the ground are some masks of satyrs and bunches of grapes. — The torso and part of the legs of the principal figure are the only antique parts of this group: all the rest is modern but very cleverly made.

209. Esculapius. This statue has a remarkable expression of a noble character. His left arm is leaning on a knotty stick, about which a snake is twined. This statue was probably once grouped with another, and very likely with Hygea; as the trace of a hand, which seems to belong to the figure of a woman is visible on the left shoulder. The modern parts of this statue are the right arm, the left hand, the feet and the stick with the snake.

210. Maximus; the son of Maximinus, who reigned during two years with his father, and was killed at the siege of Aquilea (238 A. D.).

211. Maximus. Another bust of the same.

212. Marcus Aurelius: a statue. The figure is nude and represents the emperor in his youth, with a globe in his hand. It was perhaps made for a temple and seems to belong to the best epoch of antique Roman art. — The right arm, the hand with the globe, the legs and part of the drapery are modern.

213. Gordianus the African or the Father. No other bust of this emperor is known. He was raised to the throne in spite of himself, and did not reign longer than ten months.

214. A Cippus, with an inscription.

215. Julia Mammea; the mother of Alexander Severus: a beautiful, elegant, and courageous princess. This bust has little value as a work of art.

216. A Cippus, with an inscription.

217. Salominus: a child; the eldest son of Gallienus. He is crowned with laurel. He is named Valerianus in the medals. The artistic value of this work is superior to all which the best artists produced in Rome at that time.

218. A Cippus, with an inscription.

219. Pupienus. He was elected to the throne on account of his virtues, but he was assassinated by the Prætorian guards.

220. A Cippus, with an inscription.

221. A Cippus, with an inscription.

222. Pupienus: another bust.

223. Leda. A statue smaller than life. — The head, the arms, the swan and part of the drapery are modern.

224. Apollo: a statue, similar to that which is in the first corridor (N. 119). The figure is nude, a sea bird is at its feet. The half of both arm, the feet and a part of the drapery are modern.

225. Gordianus Pius; the third emperor who had this name. He was elected by the prætorian legionaries and was killed by the order of Philippus at Zaite on the Euphrates. His reign lasted six years.

226. Tranquilla; the daughter of Misitheus and wife of Gordianus: a very goodnatured woman. Her busts are rare.

227. A Cippus, with an inscription.

228. Gallienus, this bust is much better executed than might be expected in an epoch in which art had already begun to decay, as it then did still more under Clorius and Galerius. He reigned seven years with his father Valerianus, during which had rebelled against his authority.

229. Melpomene or Clio: a statue by Atticianus, a Greek sculptor not much renowned, who lived in the third or fourth century. His name is written on the base. The head, left arm, right hand and a part of the lyre are modern.

230. An ancient breast plate, in a Roman fashion, in marble. It is a military trophy, and is certainly Roman, as Greeks did not allow such monuments of individual glory to be made in any solid materials like marble or stone, so that no Greek trophy is ever to be found. — It was brought from Rome in 1788.

231. Trajan Decius, who died in the year 249 of the present era. His busts are very rare. His features reveal much of that bravery and kindness, which rendered him dear to his subjects and soldiers. He reigned two years with his son Etruscus or Herennius.

232. Salonina, the wife of Gallienus. She honoured the throne by the best virtues proper to her sex.

233. Probus: famous on account of his uprightness and his victories. He would perhaps have restored the empire, which was then falling into ruin, had he not been killed a military sedition.

234. Gallienus: another bust.

235. Carino, the son of Caro and Magna Urbica. He became execrable to everybody in consequence of his tyranny over the Gauls. He was killed by a tribune in the second year of his reign.

236. An altar dedicated to the Lares of Augustus. On its front there are three figures, and a chicken. The figure in the middle bears a Lituus (the wand of augurs) in its right hand; the one at its left side holds a plate (patera) in one hand, and a vase with some fruits in the other. On the right side of the altar are two crowned figures, one of which carries a drinking horn (potorium cornu) and a patera, and the other a drinking horn also, and a pail. On the opposite side is a winged Victory standing by a trophy; on the back of the altar is a wreath of oak between two olive branches, a perfericulus (a kind of vase to pour libations on pateras) and a patera.

237. Quintillius; the brother of Claud II. A bust. He possessed many of the best qualities of an onest and worthy man, but very few of those which made one worthy of sitting on a throne and ruling others. His reign lasted but twenty days.

241. Night, a statue standing, larger than life, with mantle in black basalte. Come to the Gallery in 1874 from Poggio Imperiale Villa.

238. Sleep. A winged nude boy in black marble. He holds two poppies and the horn of dreams. It is placed on a funeral cippus bearing an inscription which dedicates it to C. Telegennus. On the back of the cippus the door of Hades is figured, above which is a lituus, a perfericulus and a patera.

239. Philip the Elder; the son of a chief of robbers, who usurped the throne and reigned five years with his son Philip the younger. This bust is rare as there are very few of this emperor and is also interesting as a specimen of what the art produced in an epoch in which it had already degenerated. Its artistic value is however small.

234 bis. Charity, a white marble statue.

235 bis. Vestale, a statue as above. All two come from Poggio Imperiale Villa in 1874.

240. Constantine the Great: a bust. A work of little value in itself, but good in comparison of the generality of artistic productions in its time. Its style resembles that of some medals. Busts of this emperor are very rare. The Museo Capitolino has none in its collection, as it also wants others which are to be found in this.

285. Laocoon. This magnificent group, work of Baccio Bandinelli a Florentine sculptor of the XVII Century, is copied from the Greek original, masterpiece of Polidorus Ottenodorus and Agesandrus. It represents Laocoon's punishment, being it opposed to the gods' will to introduce the famous wood horse in the Trojan city.

The Hall of Niobe.

Peter Leopold had this hall constructed in 1779, in order to collect here the splendid antique statues of Niobe and the Niobidi, which some years before (1772), he had ordered to be transported to Florence from the garden of the Medici Villa at Rome where they had been not very wisely placed.

The whole group is believed to have been composed of sixteen statues, the pedagogue included, but the number of Niobe's children is doubtful. Homer speak of twelve, but according to other poets or historians they should, be 3, 5, 10, 14 or even 20. In our collection there are fourteen, but two of them are so similar that they seem to represent the same personage, and two others probably do not belong to the group.

Niobe, the wife of Amphion and daughter of Tantalus, according to Ovid and Apollodorus, used to boast of the number and beauty of her children and dispised her sister Latona who had only two, Apollo and Diana. Latona felt deeply offended and revenged herself by instigating her two children against the Niobidi. Apollo killed the sons and Diana the daughters; and the unhappy Niobe (as Homer relates) was then petrified by the cruel sorrow she experienced.

Ovid supposes the massacre to have happened in the hippodrome by the walls of Athens, and according to other poets Niobe's metamorphosis took place on the Sipyle, a mountain in Lybia, while her children were killed in Thebes.

These splendid statues were dug out in Rome close to the gate of S. Paolo in 1583. Cardinal Ferdinand de' Medici purchased them for the sum of 7938 francs, and placed this famous group in his palace in Rome (Villa Medici now Accademia di Francia).

Some of the heads of these statues have often been cast in plaster and carefully copied and studied, and casts of the whole family were requested by several Academies in Europe. Winckelmann, in describing these statues says that Niobe's daughters were struck by Diana's arrows, and their attitude, in fact, represents that anxiety and bewilderment which is caused by the fear of a death, which is imminent and inevitable. The prelate Fabbroni has written and published a monograph on this group, and had good drawings of these statues engraved and published in his book. Montfaucon has also published in his first volume (p. 107) an engraving by Perrier, representing this group as it was set in the Villa Medici at Rome, where the children formed a circle of which the mother stood in the middle.

It is also to be remarked that in the Museum at Rome there are two statues, which certainly belonged to another group similar to this. One of these to which the head and arms are wanting is exactly like the Niobide N. 246 of our group. It was once in the Quirinal palace, among the monuments collected by cardinal d'Este, in the Villa Adriana. A head of Niobe is in England, another head of one of the daughters is in the gallery at Munich, which is a proof of the old celebrity of these statues.

As to the way in which they were grouped many different opinions have been given, but nothing is known with certainty. The most reliable is that of Mr. Charles Robert Cockerell, a very clever English architect, who spent a long time in Greece to study the remains of the antique monuments of that classic country, which was formerly the cradle of the arts and sciences. According to his opinion these statues were destined to decorate the front of a temple. Returning from Greece in 1816 and being in Florence, he studied all these statues with great care, and made the drawing that is now exhibited in this hall, and in which he only put the fourteen figures of our collection.

Their different sizes and the progressive diminution of their height, as well as their various attitudes and the harmony, in short, resulting to the whole group from placing them as Mr. Cockerell did in his drawing, all seems to be a proof of what the clever English artist has conjectured. This opinion has also a good support in some words of Pliny about a group of Niobe's family, which existed at Rome in his time, taken from a temple of Apollo Sosienus, and which was a work of Phidias and Praxiteles.

The Arduino and Monsignor Fabbroni, then quote an antique Greek epigram which attributes this group to Praxiteles.

These statues in fact, since their discovery, were always reputed to be monuments of the greatest importance, particularly on account of their extraordinary value as works of art, and if they are not all equally excellent there are few of them which might not be considered worthy of being attributed to the most celebrated artists of Greece.

The learned Royal Antiquary Cav. Zannoni, in his praiseworthy work, edited in 1819 « Galleria di Firenze illustrata, » speaks of these statues with much erudition, and what he says is perhaps all that it was ever possible to discover on this subject.

241. Niobe. A colossal statue representing Niobe in the act of praying the gods that her youngest daughter who has found refuge in her bosom, may be saved. She is clothed in a long thin robe, and the daughter is dressed with that kind of garment which the Greeks used to call χιτῶν. — The right hand of the mother and the left foot of the girl are modern.

242. A young woman. The original place of this statue was perhaps by that of the dying brother (N. 244) as its eyes are just cast down with an expression of deep compassion and noble sorrow. The arms, a part of the dress and mantle, and the right foot are modern.

243. A young woman. The artistic value of this statue is inferior to that of all the rest in this group. The head is perhaps not original or it has at least been spoiled in some attempts at restoring it. — The hands, the feet and a part of the drapery are modern.

244. The dying son. He is entirely nude and lying on his mantle. The attitude is noble and expressive; the mouth is half open; the breast swelling and the terrible aspect of approaching death is manifest in every part of the body. — The right arm and foot are modern.

245. The wounded son. Half nude and kneeling, the left hand pressing the wounded side. It is doubtful whether this statue belongs to the Niobe family: it was once considered to be a Narcissus. — The left hand and foot are modern.

246. A young Niobide. A girl in the act of flying away. Her beautiful head expresses amazement and sorrow. She tries to defend herself by raising and spreading the edge of her dress. — The left hand and foot are modern.

247. The pedagogue. A bearded old man clad in that military costume which was then called paludamentum. He seems to be in the act of running, to the Hippodrome to defend his pupils. Some archæologists have supposed him to be Amphion their father: it is Winkelmann who thought this statue to represent the pedagogue or tutor of the young Niobidi. — The arms are modern, and very likely the head also. — In the Louvre Museum there is a statue like this grouped with one like that of the youngest Niobide (N. 256).

248. A young Niobide. A standing statue, of a youth, half nude, in an attitude of terror. He is lifting his mantle or clamis so, as to make a shelter of it for his head, while he is flying from the danger by which he is threatened. This statue is the best in the group: the expression of the head is marvellous; the forms of the whole body are beautiful and noble; the foot which is trampling upon the ground is wonderfully modelled. — A half of the right and the whole of the left arm and a half of the right leg are modern.

249. A young daughter. A work of not great artistic value. The neck and arms are modern.

250. A young Niobide. Half nude, in the act of lifting his clamys as a shelter in his flight. The movement of a flying person and the expression of fright are remarkable in this figure. — The arms, the right leg and a part of the mantle are modern.

251. A young woman. This statue is thought not to belong to this group, but to represent a Psyche, as it is just similar to one of this subject, which is in the Museo Capitolino. The wings have probably been cut off. — The arms, and several parts of the drapery are modern.

252. A young Niobide. A nude statue, similar in its movement to N. 255. A piece of marble which covers the left leg seems to indicate that this statue is made to be looked at from the opposite side. — The right arm is modern: the neck and some other parts are restored.

253. A young Niobide: quite nude. There is a wound in the side on which the right hand rests. The head is turned upward with an expression of pain and resentment. The right leg is shrinking in the contraction of the muscles caused by the smarting of the wound. This figure is one of the finest in the group and is also very well preserved, as the point of the nose is the only part restored.

254. A young Niobide. Similar to N. 253, or rather a copy of it, with a slight modification in its movement, and less skill in the modelling of some details.

255. A young Niobide. Similar N. 252. — The right hand, the nose and the mouth are modern.

256. The youngest of Niobe's sons. In the act of flying, and turning his head back with an expression of pain and dismay. The body is partly covered by a clamys, waving in the wind. — The right arm and left hand are modern.

257. One of Niobe's daughters. The expression of the head, the style of the drapery and other characteristics of the figure are so similar to those of the group of the mother with the youngest daughter, which stands next to it that one might easily attribute it to the same author. The arms are modern.

The following busts complete the decoration of this hall.

258. A bust of a man. The head is very beautiful and particularly remarkable for the peculiar shape of the skull. It was once believed to be a portrait of Fabius Maximus.

259. Jupiter, a colossal bust. Majesty, power and benevolence are expressed at the same time in the features of this splendid head. In the Museo Pio Clementino there is a bust similar to this.

260. Neptune. A colossal head.

261. Pompey. A modern bust with the head in porphyry; admirable considering the difficulty of carving this kind of granite.

Hall of Inscriptions and Sculptures.

The Greek and Latin inscriptions collected in Florence when Mr. Gori transcribed them in his book, are now almost doubled and have been divided by Mr. Lanzi into classes, following the example of the collections existing in Rome and Verona.

The 1st class contains the inscriptions dedicated to the Gods and their Ministers;

the 2^d to the Cæsars;

the 3^d }
the 4th } to the Consuls and Magistrates of Rome;

the 5th to Public Shows and Amusements;

the 6th to Warriors;

the 7th to the Manes of the Dead;

the 8th to Marriages;

the 9th to Freedmen;

the 10th to the Tombs of the Christians;

the 11th Epigraphs;

the 12th different inscriptions.

Two more classes of Latin and Greek inscriptions on various subjects have been added later, which are not numbered.

262. Bacchus and Ampelos. This group is larger than life and is a specimen of the best antique Greek style. Bacchus is gently leaning on Ampelos' left shoulder, while the young Faun, with a malicious smile, shows him a goblet, which he holds in his right hand. The hooked stick and the flageolet are hanging from the trunk of a tree; the flageolet has ten pipes, which number is uncommon, but may be the fault of the sculptor.

A similar group in the Museum at Rome differs only in one particular from this, which consists in Bacchus being bare-footed, while this one wears hunting sandals. The head of the god has a remarkable expression of nobility and is wonderfully executed. The head is in one piece with the rest of the statue and very well preserved, and has not been reset as was once erroneously asserted. It was dug out at Rome by the Porta Maggiore, and bought by Ferdinand II of the Medici.

This group is placed on an antique Egyptian monument representing a Pompa Isiaca (Pomp of Isis). It is a round altar of granite adorned with a bas-relief. Lanzi thinks it belongs to an epoch preceeding the century of Adrian. An engraving representing this altar is published in Father Kircker's Edipo Egiziano, v. 3, p. 426, and also by Montfaucon; v. 4, table 286; and Mr. Zannoni has given a splendid description of it, with five drawings in his Galleria di Firenze.

263. Mercury. Life size. A splendid antique statue, in a state of perfect preservation. It is perhaps the pacific Mercury, as it is often represented in some antique medals. Many copies of this statue are to be found in various museums. The half of both its arms is modern.

264. A Priestess. As large as life and particularly remarkable for its fine drapery, which gives a noble aspect to the whole figure. The head and left hand are modern.

This statue is placed on a Cippus, bearing an inscription: P. Ferrarius, Hermes; which was found in the environs of Pisa. There are also figures of various toilette utensils, and the measure of the Roman foot; the longest ever known, corresponding to 1881 $\frac{1}{15}$ of the Parisien foot (ancient measure).

265. Venus genitrix. A statue in the best Greek style with noble and grand proportions. Her body is almost entirely clad in a very light garment, which adorns her beautiful form without hiding it. — The right arm, and the left hand are modern. The tibia in the restored hand has been added by the restorer, who probably mistook the subject of the statue.

266. Venus Urania. One of the finest statues in this gallery. — She is represented in the act of dressing a lock of her hair with the right hand, while the left is holding a cloth which covers her from the waist down to the feet. Her head is crowned by a diadem coloured red and gold, on which hollow spaces are visible, a proof of its having been formerly enriched with precious stones. Both the arms are modern.

It was discovered at Bologna, by the Granduke Ferdinand II in 1657.

The base of this statue is a splendid cippus of the best Greek style, adorned with bas-reliefs representing three bacchantes and Agave bearing the head of Pentheus.

267. Carneades. A bust in good style and perfect state of preservation.

268. Ovid. A bust, much restored; and its authenticity is doubtful.

269. A horned and bearded head, placed on a cippus dedicated to Hateria Superba when one year, six months and 25 days old; who is represented upon it in bas-relief, with a dove held in her left hand and another at her feet. A dog is also standing near her to which she presents a bunch of grapes. Two genii hover above the scene with garlands in their hands.

270. Head supposed to be the portrait of Marius.

271. A bearded head, adorned with a garland.

. . . Homer, in black stone (Lapis suillius).

292. Silenus (smaller than life), drunk and lying on the ground, with his eyes half shut as if unable to keep them open. One of his hands is resting on some bunches of grapes, and the other is trying to raise a goblet to his lips. His feet have the true soccas, which were used by the ancient comedians.

This statue is placed on a sarcophagus on which are carved some figures of boxing genii.

273. Unknown head, of mediocre artistic value.

274. Scipio. This bust is a clever work and very rare, as few portraits of this personage have been preserved to the present time.

275. A head of an old man, in black stone (Lapis suillius). It was once supposed to be a portrait of Euripides.

Underneath is a sepulchral cippus dedicated to Julius Theopompus, as appears from a Greek inscription, which is under a bas-relief representing Cupid and Psyche.

276. Cippus, upon which is placed a beautiful head of a goat, in a very rare black stone, stained with white spots. — It was brought from Rome, in 1788.

277. Sappho. A bust.

278. Alcibiades. A bust.

279. Sophocles, the Greek tragic poet. A bust.

280. Aristophanes. A bust, with a Greek inscription.

282. A large bas-relief, fastened on the wall, supposed to represent the emperor Gallienus going to the chase. He carries a long spear (venabulum) and is followed by his horse led by a soldier. The work is rough, and seems to have been made to decorate a frieze.

Around are also fixed on the wall several beautiful portraits, among which, worthy of particular remark are those of Pompey, Seneca, Demostenes, Homer and Plato. The last one (a dimin. figure) is the most precious, and very rare, as it bears the name inscribed in Greek. It was sent from Greece to Lorenzo il Magnifico by Jerome Rossi of Pistoia.

285. Bacchante; a bust. The head alone, which is in basalt, is antique. The rest is in oriental alabaster and various kinds of coloured marble.

It is placed on the fragment of a column, which bears an inscription.

286. The head of an old man.

287. Solon; a bust, bearing an antique inscription, which makes it very precious, by affording a sure proof of its authenticity.

288. An unknown man; a bust. The head and neck are in basalt, the tunic is in white marble, and the mantle in gray marble.

281. Nero. A small statue, carved in a kind of dark basalt. The head is modern.

283. A small statue, in white marble. The figure is standing, the elbow leaning on a kind of column. Beneath is a sarcophagus with genii who bear the emblems of Mars.

289. A figure seated, in a consular dress. — The head is modern.

334. A tired traveller; a very expressive figure in alto-rilievo, in perfect state of preservation.

293. Head of an old man, in perfect preservation.

294. Socrates. A skilfully worked head; but the nose has been restored.

295. A Philosopher.

296. Anacreon; a bust.

284. Eon, the Persian Divinity; a strong and monstrous figure, with snakes twined upon it.

298. Erma, with the head of an old man, worked with skill.

299. Mark Anthony; a colossal bust, not very well preserved but rare.

300. Demosthenes; the head alone: very expressive.

301. Aratus, a bust.

302. Cicero, a bust larger than life. The head alone is ancient and wonderfully well preserved, and certainly belongs to the best epoch of Roman art. All the rest is a restoration. — This bust was purchased by Ferdinand II of the Medicis, from the Ludovisi family in 1669.

303. An urn for the ashes of the dead; in marble, adorned with beautiful carvings, and bearing a Greek inscription, in which the name of Agaton is read.

304. A Philosopher.

305. Hypocrates, a bust. The face is remarkably well worked and expressive.

There are fourteen other busts placed above in this room, but most of them are unknown.

Around the hall are also some cinerarian urns, and under them there are six sarcophagi.

Cabinet of the Hermaphrodite.

306. Hermaphrodite, lying upon a lion's skin; a splendid statue similar to one in the Paris Museum belonging to the Borghesi collection. The lower part of this statue has been so cleverly restored that it perfectly agrees with the upper portion which is antique and is considered a master piece of Greek sculpture. The part restored is also in parian marble. — It was purchased by the Grand Duke Ferdinand II of the Medicis from the Ludovisi family, in 1669.

307. Fragment of a torso, a splendid piece of work, so much more admirable as it is in basalt, which is very hard and not easily carved.

319. A Philosopher.

308. Ganimede. The old fragment of this statue, which Stephen Colonna of the princes of Palestrina presented to Cosmus I was so much admired by Benvenuto Cellini, that he undertook to restore it. The head, both the arms and feet and the eagle are his work; in which he did not at all endeavour to imitate the antique, but only pleased himself with the application of his own talent and skill. — The head is particularly remarkable for the same fineness of execution, which make Cellini's works in metal so admirable.

311. Pan and an Hermaphrodite. A group of small figures. — That of Pan is almost entirely new, but the restoration has been executed with great skill, and in perfect correspondence with the antique parts of the fragment.

347. Bust of Seneca. It was discovered in the store-rooms of the Gallery, in 1864.

309. A Philosopher.

310. The infant Hercules strangling the serpents. The extraordinary vigour and strength of the future hero is wonderfully represented in this figure of a child,

312. An unknown female bust of beautiful form and wonderfully executed. It was once believed to be the portrait of Berenice, the mistress of Titus. A royal band girdles her hair, which is dressed in several rows of curls, hanging all round the head and down to the shoulders; a style of hairdressing unusual in the Roman princesses. It is an old Jewish fashion and was used by Mad.^e La Vallière et Mad.^e Montespan. The curls were probably all false.

BAS-RELIEFS.

The following six bas-reliefs are fragments of the figured decoration of the ARA PACIS AUGUSTÆ.

8. The papish portrait of Augustus.
9. The family of the Clauds.
10. The goddess Tellus.
11. The sacerdotal corporation of the Flamini.
12. The accompaniment of the Senators.
13. Fragment of ornamental decoration.

14. The sacrifice of a bull. Julius Firmicus is the only writer who makes any mention of such sacrifices, which seem not to have been performed in the remotest epochs of Paganism. The figures in the present bas-relief are crowned with laurel, the one behind representing the sacrificer. The medal in the middle, was perhaps intended to bear an inscription indicating the subject of the bas-relief, as is seen in other similar monuments.

15. Decoration of good style. It is divided in two parts, being deficient of the piece of connection.

325. A model of a Temple.

which may be pronounced one of the best works of antique art. An antique bronze statue quite similar to this is kept in the Museum of Naples.

317. A child with a goose; a very cleverly worked group, probably intended to adorn a fountain.

316. Antinous; a splendid monumental bust, in perfect preservation. It was purchased at Rome in 1671, by Cardinal Leopold de' Medici, for the price of 77 scudi (462 fr.).

290. Ceres. A pretty seating statue.

313. A child holding a goose, similar to N. 317.

314. Juno; a colossal bust; in the best monumental style.

315. A colossal torso of a Faun. Till 1778 this fragment was the chief ornament of the Gaddi Gallery in Florence. It is now considered one of the finest specimens of antique Greek art, and is not less famous than the celebrated torso, called di Belvedere, in the Vatican Museum. Its style is similar to that of the Laocoon.

318. Alexander dying; a very beautiful colossal head, considered one of the most marvellous productions of antique classic art.

321. Unknown bust; very expressive, and very well preserved.

323. Cupid ad Psyche, a very pleasant group which was discovered on the Monte Celio at Rome, in 1666. A group like this but a little larger is seen in the Museo Capitolino.

324. Fragment of a statue in Parriian marble, supposed to represent Bacchus from the goat skin by which it is partly covered. It belongs to the best epoch of Greek art.

326. A bas-relief representing the interior of a clothier's shop, made to serve for a sign.

327. Three pretty female figures. Fragment of bas-relief.

328. Jupiter Ammon ; a colossal head in bas-relief.

329. An Emperor sacrificing ; a well preserved bas-relief.

330. A Genius, bearing Jupiter's thunder-bolts.

331. Two women and a bull ; a bas-relief in a good Greek style.

332. A pretty child bearing a vase on his shoulders.

333. A dying Bacchante ; a bas-relief. See an illustration of this, by the Abbé Zannoni (Illustrazione del vaso Cornisiano).

336. Three Bacchantes ; a bas-relief.

337. A bas-relief, the subject of which is similar to that of N. 326.

In the Hall of the Portraits of Painters.

338. A statue of Cardinal Leopold de' Medici, the original founder of this famous collection of portraits.

339. The Medicean Vase, placed in the middle of the hall.

On this famous urn, generally known under the name of Vaso Mediceo a splendid bas-relief of nine figures is sculptured, which represents the Sacrifice of Iphigenia. The young victim is sitting at the foot of an altar before a simulacrum of Diana, and holds a small branch in her hand, with an expression of deep sorrow and resignation. Two galeati (young men with helmets) stand by her. The one who looks into her face is supposed to be Achilles. He is partly nude but wrapped in a mantle, and wears a helmet on his head and a girdle round his waist, on which the forefinger of his right hand is fixed. The other is Diomedes, naked, all but the shoulders and arms, from which a mantle falls in majestic folds.

Montfaucon thinks the figure behind that of Achilles to be Ulysses; Lanzi takes it for Agamemnon, and Zannoni describes it as a figure of Menelaos, since Ulysses is generally represented with the pileus on his head, and Agamemnon ought to be in mourning. This figure in fact is very like that of Menelaos in the famous group in the Museo Clementino (See Visconti, v. IV, Tab. 18) and the calm expressed in it, is quite suitable to that prince, for whom the innocent girl was rather sacrificed than for Diana. Agamemnon is very likely represented in the figure behind these.

The following figures are probably other captains of the Greek army. Another figure of a naked youth, who seems to be walking rapidly, with a short mantle waving down from his shoulders, is supposed to represent the herald Talthybius.

On the upper part of the vase, two vine branches are sculptured in very low relief: the lower part is adorned with leaves and flowers of acanthus.

The use of this vase and of other similar ones has been very well described by Visconti in his illustrations of the Borghesi Gallery, where he quotes the account that Homer gives of ancient banquets. The guests, says he, used to sit at a little distance one from the other; a small table being placed before each of them.

A huge vase stood in a corner of the hall, in which wine was kept mixed with water, from which mixture (crasis) the vase was called crater. By the means of small vessels the wine was then drawn from it to be distributed to the guest by the cup bearer. These craters were usually made of solid material and also marble, like this one, which was discovered at Tivoli in the Villa Adriana, and is one of the most important monuments of antiquity, certainly belonging to the best epoch of Greek art.

In the saloon of the Italian School.

341. Upon another oriental alabaster table: Sleep; a splendid marble figure, representing a naked child sleeping: a very remarkable piece of antique sculpture.

Two busts of Seneca on the two sides.

342. The Venus of the Medicis. Of all the statues of Venus which Rome anciently possessed, and which are mentioned by Pliny, this is undoubtedly to be numbered among the finest, as none so perfect has ever been dug out from the ruins of that wonderful city, which has afforded so rich a harvest of ancient art treasures. One might say of this statue of Venus that it is among the other statues of that goddess what that goddess herself is among the other goddesses. Writers of different nations have contributed to its celebrity, which has been continually growing with the ages. The right arm and the lower half of the left are modern, and cleverly done, though far from the perfection of the original.

The Venus is probably not inferior to that of Praxiteles, which was in the temple of Guidus and of which Ovid wrote that her divine majesty alone forbade her to move.

It was found in Adrian's villa at Tivoli, and transported to Florence under Cosimo III, about the year 1677 with the Arrotino (the knife-whetter) (346) and the group of the two Wrestlers (343).

Cleomenes the son of Apollodoro the Athenian, was the author of this masterpiece, according to an inscription in the base, which is evidently modern, but may be supposed to have been faithfully copied from the antique one, when the base was restored, as the name of one of the most famous artists of Greece, like that of Phydias, Polycletus, Scopas or Praxiteles would have been chosen if one had intended to attribute a false author to this statue, while that of Cleomenes would be almost unknown, if this statue had not been discovered.

Its height is 4 feet, 7 inches and 8 lines.

343. The Wrestlers. This group is considered to be one of the best specimens of ancient Greek sculpture. One of the two athletes has thrown the other to the ground, and is still threatening his conquered antagonist. In each muscle and vein the violent efforts of the wrestling are wonderfully represented. The winner seems to rejoice in his victory, while the other, forced down by the vigorous arms of his fortunate rival bears the expression of impotent wrath. He is still striving to get up again, but his conqueror prevents his stirring by strongly grasping and pressing both his arms. The head of this figure is supposed not to be antique and seems at least to have been retouched but in all the other parts of the group some pieces which are evidently new are small and of little importance. — It was brought from Rome, with the Niobe, in 1677.

344. The Dancing Faun. This statue undoubtedly belongs to the best epoch of ancient sculpture. The figure is entirely nude, and is executed with a remarkable knowledge of anatomy: every part of the body bears the features proper to the satyrs, and a kind of convulsive briskness seems to agitate each muscle. It is generally assigned to Praxiteles, but no reliable argument can be adduced to sustain this opinion, except the extraordinary artistic value of the work itself. The figure is dancing and playing rattles (crotola) and the scabillum or crepetia, tied at the right foot, a kind of musical instrument in the shape of small bellows, which gave a sharp note when pressed. Maffei considers this statue as one of the most admirable works of antiquity, but the head and both arms are new, and add a great value to this statue, as they are sculptured by Michelangelo, who made them with such wonderful skill, so perfectly imitating the ancient style that the whole figure seems to be the work of a single artist.

345. The little Apollo (L'Apollino); so named to distinguish it from the other celebrated Apollo called di Belvedere, in Rome; which is bigger than this, and is as noble and grand as this is graceful and fine. It was brought from Rome in 1780, and is similar to the little Apollo in the Albani Gallery. The style is so analogous to that of the Venus de' Medici, that it is supposed to be also a work of Cleomenes. All parts of this statue are ancient.

Its height is 4 feet, 6 inches.

346. The Arrotino (The Whetter) or Lo Spione (The Spy), a magnificent and celebrated statue, found at Rome in the XIV century and brought to Florence in 1677. The figure is nude and represents a man bent on a stone, on which he is whetting a hooked knife, which he holds by his right hand, and presses by two fingers of the left, while his head is turned upwards, with an expression of keen attention.

This statue has long been supposed to represent Cincinnatus, or Manlius Capitolinus, or Milicius, or Accius Nevius, and also the slave who discovered the plot of Brutus' sons in favour of Tarquin, or the one who revealed the conspiracy of Catilin against the Roman republic. The most learned archæologists now however agree in thinking the subject of this figure to be the Scythian man to whom Apollo gave the order of skinning Marsyas. His attitude, in fact, is just that of a person listening to an order and acting in conformity of it; and his face bears much of the characteristic features of the Scythian nation. Winkelmann then describes a carved stone formerly belonging to Mr. Stoch's collection and now passed into that of the Emperor of Germany, in which the Scythian is just represented in this attitude before the figure of Marsyas. A bas-relief also exists in the Borghesi Gallery, and another one at S. Paolo near Rome, both representing Maryas' death, as well as several old medals, in all which the Scythian is represented in the same way. This opinion is finally supported by clear arguments by the Abbé Zannoni, in his celebrated work intitled: "Illustrazione della Galleria."

This statue is also a splendid master-piece, in a perfect state of preservation.

Cabinet of Gems.

This fine cabinet, built in the form of a tribune, is decorated with four columns in oriental alabaster, and four in verde antico, about seven feet high. The six glass-cases contain upwards of 400 pieces of workmanship in pietre fini, rock crystal, lapislazzuli etc., statuettes in jasper and calcedonius; busts, vases, cups etc., all enriched with enamel, and the most precious stones and gems.

All these works were executed in Florence in the time of the Medicis, and their material value, although so rich is in many of them surpassed by their artistic worth.

Eight columns of Sienese agate and eight of rock crystal; eight statues of the apostles in pietra dura, by Orazio Mochi, a Florentine; some bas-reliefs, busts, vases, also in pietra dura, were executed to decorate the altar intended to adorn the splendid Medicean chapel in S. Lorenzo.

Case I (to the right).

A vase in lapislazzuli of 12 inches in diameter, in one piece.

Three small busts of women in jacinth, one of which is enriched with white enamel.

Two small bas-reliefs in gold on jasper, attributed to Gian

Bologna, but now thought to be a work of Michael Mazzafirri, a Florentine goldsmith.

A small vase in agate, with enamelled gold handleless, in Cellini's style.

Case II.

On the lower stage.

Two vases in sardonyx, very precious for their size and the beauty of the grain. The name of Lorenzo de' Medici, is engraved on both. Their value is inestimable.

A casket in rock crystal, with the life of Christ in 24 divisions, engraved on the reverse side by Valerio Belli, of Vicenza, by order of Clement VII who gave it in 1533 to Francis I of France in the occasion of the marriage of Catherine de' Medici with that king's son, then called Henry II.

It is not known how it was brought back to Florence. The inventories of the Gallery bear it registered for the first time in 1635.

This casket is considered to be the rarest work in the collection.

On the middle stage:

Cosimo II kneeling before an altar. A full length, in bas-relief, ornamented with precious stones; executed in the manufactory of works in pietra dura, in 1619.

A cup of rock crystal, with a gold enamelled cover, on which are the initials of Diana of Poitiers Cellini's style.

On the higher stage:

Two vases of rock crystal, one of which is ornamented with admirable engravings, and the other has purposely been left unengraved, not to spoil the extraordinary pureness of its natural transparency.

Three bas-reliefs in gold, attributed to Gian Bologna or rather to Mazzafirri.

Two small statues representing two of the Apostles, in pietra dura.

Case III.

A triangular cup in emerald, in one piece.

A statue in pietra dura.

Several vases in rock-crystal, agate, and different kinds of jasper.

Case IV.

A lapislazzuli vase ornamented with pearls, and remarkable for the regularity of its white spots.

A red jasper cup ornamented with diamonds, which a small statue of a warrior in enamelled gold on its cover.

A variegated jasper vase, ornamented with pearls.

A Venus and Cupid in prophiry, the work of Pietro Maria Serbaldi da Pescia.

Case V.

A Grison jasper cup ornamented with pearls, representing a Hydra, with the figure of Hercules in gold; by Michael Mazzafirri of Florence.

A small vase in acqua marina.

Another vase in emerald.

A head in turquoise, of an extraordinary size. The eyes are two diamonds.

A large vase in blood-red jasper.

A large cup in rock crystal, engraved; with the handles in enamelled gold.

A view of the Piazza della Signoria, in pietra dura, with bas-reliefs in gold, by Gaspero Mola.

A bowl in the form of a bottle, of Spanish coralline, ornamented with pearls and cameos (High, to the left).

A cats-eye or star-stone, of extraordinary size, surmounted by a pearl.

Two small statues of St. Peter and St. Paul, in pietra dura.

Case VI.

A vase in lapislazzuli, remarkable for its uncommon size and the elegance of its shape as well as for its enamelled gold ornaments.

A cup in rock crystal, with a gold handle enamelled. A splendid work, attributed to Benvenuto Cellini. It is now believed to be the work of Masseroni of Milan.

A bowl in the form of a sea shell in blood-red jasper.

A small oval cup, made out of a single garnet.

A bust of Tiberius, in turquoise. The gold ornaments are attributed to Cellini.

Small statue of an apostle, in pietra dura.

In the centre of the room.

A small casket in rock crystal, surmounted by an uncommonly big pearl, in the form of a little dog.

Cabinet of Cameos engraved stones, nielli, etc.

This collection of cameos, engraved stones, etc., consists chiefly of the numerous and precious objects of this kind that the Palatine princess Anna Maria de' Medici bequeathed to Florence, and that her ancestors had gathered with such munificence and good taste.

It is disposed in 12 compartments. The first, second, third and fourth compartments contain old cameos; the fifth and the sixth contain modern cameos of the XVth century. Antique cut stones are in the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th glass-cases; modern ones of the XVth century are kept in the 11th and 12th.

We shall only mention the more notable objects.

Compartment I.

N. 3. Large cameo, in onyx, representing Antoninus Pius in the act of sacrificing to Hope, while the Genius of the Empire is throwing some incense on the altar. The extraordinary size of this cameo makes it very rare, although it has been wrought by a mediocre artist.

7. Cameo in onyx, representing a winged Cupid playing on a lyre, and sitting on the back of a lion. The name of the author (Protarcos) is written under the figures ΠΡΩΤΑΡΧΟΣ ΕΠΟΙΕΙ.

13. Apollo in repose. A pretty little figure in gold, on onyx. A very rare work, once belonging to the Piccolomini museum. — See Maffei: Illustrazioni delle gemme figurate, vol. III, p. 96.

II.

33. Iphigenia recognising her brother Orestes and his friend Pylades. A cameo in onyx.

40. Fragment of a two wheeled car, in onyx; restored in gold by Cellini.

51. Head of Dodonean Jupiter, in onyx. One of the most interesting works in the collection.

68. Bust of a Bacchante. A splendid carving in onyx.

III.

86. The head of Augustus, under the form of Apollo. A remarkable cameo in onyx.

87. Head of Augustus; veiled and crowned with oak. A splendid fragment, in onyx.

109. Head of Vespasian; almost full face. A splendid carving in high-relief in onyx.

114. The head of Livia; veiled and crowned with fruits, in onyx.

IV.

148. A wounded stag; in onyx.

156. The fall of Phaeton. A copy of an antique bas-relief. A splendid composition.

V.

Modern cameos.

178. The Body of Our Saviour, supported by an angel. Mantegna school. A large onyx.

180. On one side: The flight into Egypt, on the other side: The Massacre of the Innocents. A double cameo, in blood-red jasper.

VI.

Portraits.

221. Cosimo the Elder.

222. Lorenzo il Magnifico.

223. Alessandro de' Medici (by Dominici di Polo de' Vetri).

227. Catharine de' Medici.

228. Francis I, King of France.

232. Leo X.

236. Philip II. This cameo is thought to be the work of Jacopo da Trezzo, a celebrated Lombard engraver, in the service of the King of Spain.

.... Bianca Cappello.

VII.

Antique cut stones.

28. The apparition of Apollo. Onyx. A wonderfully delicate engraving.

44. Hercules; in green jade. It was the last seal of the Florentine republic, used at the time of Cosmus the Elder.

54. Hercules in Olympus, with his bride Hebe. A work in amethyst, by Teucros.

66. A Bacchanal. A drunk Silenus, on his donkey. Onyx.

76. Tritons; in amethyst.

VIII.

358. Bust of Pallas, in sardonyx.

117. Two priests of Mars (Salii) bearing their Anciles on which are same Etruscan letters.

151. Head of a young Hercules, cut in cornelian. A splendid work by Onesas.

127. The car of the sun, surrounded by the Zodiac. On the other side: The car of the moon, surrounded by a serpent, the symbol of Eternity.

IX.

185. The head of Pluto, or rather of Jupiter Pantheon. A fragment in onyx. A work belonging to the best epoch of this art.

190. A bust in sardonyx; thought to represent Leander.

203. Head of Augustus, in sapphire.

208. Cajus and Lucius, sons of Agrippa; in cornelian. On the reverse: Faustulus with the twins.

219. Head of Galba, in cornelian.

220. Head of Vitellius, in green jasper.

228. Bust of Adrian, in cornelian.

233. Bust of Lucius Verus, in cornelian.

237. Bust of Crispina, the wife of Commodus: in red jasper.

239. Bust of Julia Domna, the wife of Septimius Severus; in acqua marina.

X.

This compartment contains a collection of portraits of Greek philosophers and other personages, all admirably executed. The following ones are particularly to be remarked:

265. Head of a veiled woman, in cornelian.

267. Head of a woman, resembling Faustina the younger: in green jasper.

130. Mask of a Satyr, in lapislazzuli.

XI.

In this compartment there are some modern copies of the ring bearing a Sphynx (N. 2458) which was used by Augustus as a seal and which was found in his tomb, at Corea, near Rome. This precious ring once belonged to the Riccardi museum, and was lately possessed by Mrs. Margaret Fiaschi-Frosini, who gave it to the Gallery in 1859. — For the description of this ring see The Genealogy of the Count Guidi, by Scipione Ammirato; Firenze illustrata, by Leopoldo Del Migliore and The life of Richard Romulus Riccardi, by Lami.

XII.

Engraved stones of the XV and XVI century.

371. Portrait of Savonarola, in cornelian. A splendid work of Giovanni delle Corniole.

372. Bust of Pope Paul II, in cornelian; once belonging to Lorenzo il Magnifico.

373. Bust of Leo X, in jade; a work of Pier Maria Serbaldi da Pescia, or perhaps of his rival Michele di Paolo Foggini, called Michelino.

374. Portrait of the same; a seal in porphyry.

334. A marriage allegory, in calcedony; attributed to Valerio Vicentino.

386. Ring ornamented with a head, in sapphire. A modern imitation of antique style.

Then follow eight glass-cases containing about 87 ancient cameos, 7 carvings in gold, 20 Etruscan scarabees and 403 ancient and modern engraved stones, all bequeathed to the Gallery by Sir William Currie, in 1863. In this collection the head of a nymph engraved by Dioscoride is worthy of particular observation.

On the wall opposite the window is a mask of Dante, a plaster cast taken after his death. This mask was bequeathed to the Gallery by the Marquis Charles Torigiani, in 1865.

On each side of this is a small case in the form of a tripod: containing a number of ancient Roman jewels, also the seal of the Medicis, bearing the word: COSMUS R. P. FLOR. DUX. ET EJUS CONSILIARI: a work of Dominic di Polo (1532).

PART THE SECOND

Frescoes on the ceilings of the Corridors.

The frescoes on the ceiling of the first corridor were executed by Alessandro Allori, Gio. Maria Butteri, Giovanni Bizzelli and Alessandro Pieroni, although they are commonly attributed to Bernardino Poccetti who is simply the author of the ornamental figures on the angles of the vault of the Tribune. The subjects are all mythological or allegorical; the style is that which Vitruvius describes (book VII, chap. V) and Raphael revived, and is now called alla Raffaella. The date MDLXXXI which is seen in the twentieth compartment of the first corridor, probably indicates the epoch in which the decoration of the vault was begun.

The frescoes of the 2^d and 3^d corridor were executed by Cosimo Ulivelli, Angelo Gori, Jacopo Chiavistelli, Giuseppe Tonelli and Giuseppe Masini, in the second half of the XVII century, on subjects suggested by Count Ferdinand Del Maestro and Laurence Panciatichi. The fire which invaded a part of the third corridor in 1762, completely effaced the decoration of the last twelve divisions of the vault, which were then remade by Traballesi.

The subjects treated in the frescoes of the first corridor are quite fantastical and grottesque, we shall therefore only mention those of the second and third ones, which are as follows:

2^d Corridor.

1. St. Charles Borromeo and St. Philip.
2. The foundation of the order of St. Stephen.
3. Etruria.
4. A personification of Sanctity, with a glory of several Florentin Saints.
5. Piety.
6. The General Council of Florence under Pope Eugene IV in 1439.
7. St. Dominic and St. Francis.
8. The principal virtues of the grand-dukes Cosmus I, Francis I, Ferdinand I and Cosmus II.

3^d Corridor.

1. Florence.
2. Some Medicean princes, who reigned before Cosmus I.
3. Portraits of other personages of the Medici family.
4. Portraits of some notable Florentine men, who were liberal to their own town.
5. Fiesole, destroyed by the Florentines in 1010.
6. Portraits of some notable Florentine men, who were liberal to foreigners.
7. Portraits of Florentine men, who ruled on stranger countries.
8. Exploits of Florentine heroes, by sea.
9. Pisa, conquered by Florence in 1406.
10. Exploits of Florentine heroes, by land.
11. Fortune, as a favourer of the Florentine glories.
12. Hospitality of Florence to strangers.
13. Pistoia, famous on account of its civil discords between the Cancellieri and Panciatichi parties, and submitted to Florence in 1382.
14. Civil Prudence.
15. Magnificence in public and private buildings.
16. Erudition.
17. Arezzo: one of the old Etruscan towns; brought into the power of Florence in 1384.
18. Celebrated Florentine ambassadors.

19. Secretaires of the Florentine Republic.
20. Matematicks.
21. Volterra: one of the old Etruscan towns. It was subdued to the dominion of Florence in 1254.
22. Love of Country.
23. Love of Literature.
24. Theology.
25. The town of Borgo S. Lorenzo.
26. Jurisprudence and Legislation.
27. Montepulciano. Submitted to Florence in 1390.
28. Philosophy.
29. Cortona: an ancient Etruscan town. It fell under the domination of Arezzo in 1490, and was sold to Florence by king Ladislaus.
30. Politicks.
31. Musick.
32. Medicine.
33. The town of Colle. Submitted to Florence in 1349.
34. The Florentine Academies, foundend in different times.
35. Tuscan Eloquence.
36. Tuscan History.
37. The town of S. Miniato, founded by Desiderius king of the Lombards, and conquered by the Florentines in 1370.
38. Poetry.
39. Sculpture.
40. Architecture.
41. Prato: bought by the Florentine republic in 1350.
42. The Art of Painting.
43. Agriculture.
44. Leghorn. It was sold by the Genoese to Florence in 1421 and owes its prosperity to the decline of its rival Pisa.

PAINTINGS ⁽¹⁾

(Each painting in the Gallery bears a number on its frame, which corresponds to that which is marked in the catalogue).

First Corridor.

1. UNKNOWN. — Greek-byzantine school. X Cent.

The Virgin and Child seated between two angels. Above the Magis, and on either side the Apostles, half length, with their particular emblems.

Purchased in January 1889 from Mr. David Ricci at the price of 400 frs. and recognised as an old byzantine work of great value.

2. UNKNOWN. — Italian school. XII Cent. Byzantine style.

Madonna and Child. The Virgin seated on a throne formed with some cushions covered by a rich cloth. She wears a brown mantel and presses her divine Child to her breast, who is raising his little hand in the act of benediction. Two half length angels are hovering above; the back-ground is gilded and surrounded by a beautiful wreath of pink leaves.

The crusades had a great influence on Art, on account of the precious records that many of the christian warriors or pilgrims used to bring home from the oriental cities they happened to visit. It was just in that time that those quaint brown images of the Virgin attributed to St. Luca, who was then traditionally believed to be the most ancient of all Christian painters, were introduced into Europe, and so enthusiastically admired by our artists that from the eleventh century to the beginning of the thirteenth Art was plunged in darkness and barbarity, never succeeding in extricating itself from the servile and crude imitation of these primitive models.

3. UNKNOWN. — Italian school. XII Cent.

The Crucifixion. The feet of the crucified Lord are nailed on separately to the cross; the head is a little bent upon the breast; the eyes are open and staring; the hair is long and falls from the middle of the forehead upon the shoulders. A golden girdle is round the waist of the Saviour, from which a rich cloth, ornamented with gold embroideries hangs down to the knees. Above the head is a scroll bearing the words in golden letters: Jhs Nazarenus rex Judeorum.

Both ends of the horizontal arm of the cross bear the figures of the Maries (The left end having been sawed off only one figure is preserved on this side).

Under these, along both sides of the Saviour are six representations of small figures on golden ground viz:

- 1st Jesus Christ washing the feet of the Apostles.
- 2^d Judas kissing his divine master.
- 3^d The flagellation.
- 4th The deposition.
- 5th The entombment.
- 6th The resurrection.

The Crucifixion was one of the most favourite subjects of Christian artists of the first period, and the Saviour was then always represented alive on the cross, with his feet nailed separately, the eyes open, the look either calm or stern, following the common belief that our Lord was still alive when Longinus pierced his breast with the spear. This error had been generally accepted in Germany in the XIIth century through some insinuations of a certain Peter John who was also supported by the clergy. It was later spread in Italy and would probably have lasted for a long time, had not Clement V condemned it.

The influence that such disapproval of Peter John's opinion had on the way of representing the Crucifixion was not without a certain importance in the progress of art. The feet of our Lord continue to be separately nailed on the cross in the pictures of the first half of the XIIIth century according to the tradition which was still common with us at that time; but the crucified Saviour is then generally represented dead; the eyes are closed; the body is no more stiff, but bent under its own weight: the face is lined with deep wrinkles and bears the expression of long and dreary sufferings.

All this was certainly far from that scientific exactness of representation, which the study of anatomy later afforded to Art; it was yet evidently a step towards naturalism, a first attempt to animate artistic fictions by the expression of feeling and thoughts.

4. UNKNOWN. — Italian school. XIII Cent.

The Crucifixion. The feet of the Saviour are separately nailed on the cross; the eyes are closed in a convulsion which is visible in some almost grotesque contractions of the brow; the head is a little turned and bent; the nose is long and narrow; the mouth is broad and surmounted by a thin mustach; a short beard covers the chin. The back-ground is gilded; eight small compositions of diminutive figures are beneath the horizontal bar of the cross, representing the following subjects:

- 1st Christ arrested.
- 2^d Ecce Homo.
- 3^d The flagellation.
- 4th Jesus on the cross.
- 5th The deposition.
- 6th Christ buried.
- 7th The resurrection.
- 8th The eucharistic bread.

(The extremities and arms of the cross have been sawed off).

5. GUIDO DA SIENA (Guido di Graziano, called). Born 1278, died 1302.

The Virgin and Child.

A painter named Guido di Graziano was in Siena at the same time that one was in Florence, and did not only leave several splendid works, but was also the father of a family of artists, by whom art was honoured for more than half a century, so that it may be said that the Siennese school really received its first impulse from them.

This painting is a recent acquisition made by the hon. Thechnical Committee of the Florentine Galleries and Museums, after the recommandation of one of its members, Cav. Prof. Cristiano Banti, who was charged to examine the work and succeeded in proving its authenticity before his colleagues, who consequently consented to purchase it, as an object of art, which would fill up a void in the series of the antique specimens of primitive painting in our gallery.

Purchased from Mr. Murray.

6. PUCCIO CAPANNA, of Firenze. Flourished about 1349.

The Crucifixion.

7. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school, XIV Cent.

The Virgin and Child, attended by St. Peter and St. Paul. — On the pedestal are three compositions, representing: Christ in the sepulchre, The martyrdom of St. Catherine, and The martyrdom of another Saint. — On wood. Diminutive fig.

8. GIOTTO (?). Born in 1266, at Bondone in the community of Vespignano in Mugello. Died in 1337.

Christ in the garden. On the pedestal two compositions in diminutive figures represent: Christ betrayed by Judas, and Christ stripped for the crucifixion. — On wood. Half life size figures.

9. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XIV Cent.

The Virgin with the infant Jesus, St. John and St. Zenobius. The eternal above. On a golden background, in a gothic golden frame.

St. Bartholemew, sitting on a chair and holding a knife in his left hand. Four angels are around him, two of which are playing on violins and kneeling. Above are three small panels in which our Saviour (half length) in the act of benediction, and two Prophets are represented.

It was brought to this Gallery from the suppressed Chamber of Commerce in 1782.

11. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XIV Cent.

The Virgin sitting and holding the infant Saviour, and figures of angels around her, bearing pots, with lilies. St. John and St. Zenobius kneeling at her feet. — On wood; diminutive figures.

12. GIOTTO'S SCHOOL.

The Crucifixion, with small compositions on the passion of our Lord.

13. GIOTTO'S SCHOOL.

The Crucifixion. On golden back-ground. In the lower part of the painting is the Virgin, with St. John and St. Mary Magdalene.

14. ORGAGNA'S SCHOOL.

St. John the Evangelist, sitting on a chair, the right hand raised and an open book in the left. Above is a half length Christ with Seraphim and Angels. Under the feet of the saint are three figures representing Pride, Avarice and Vanity. — On wood. Life size.

15. LORENZETTI Pietro di Lorenzo, of Siena. His works are known from 1327 to 1350.

The Holy Virgin and Child, and four angels on each side. — The name of the author is inscribed with the date 1340. — On wood. Half life size fig.

This painting was given to the Gallery by the Adv. Cellesi, in 1799.

26. DADDI Bernardo. A florentine painter, died 1343.

An altar piece divided in three parts: in the middle is the Virgin with the infant Jesus, to the right hand St. Matthew the apostle and to the left St. Nicholas bishop. Under the gradino, the words: ANO . DNI . MCCCXXVIII FR. NICHOLAUS DE MAZINGHIS DE CANPI, ME FIERI . FECIT . P . REMEDIO . ANIME . MATRIS . ET FRATUM (sic) . BERNARDUS . DE . FLORENTIA . ME PINXIT. — On wood. Half life size fig.

From the Convent of Ognissanti in Florence.

20. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XIV Cent.

The front side of an altar with an image of St. Cecilia, surrounded by eight compositions, representing some events in her life, in small figures.

This painting was taken from the church of St. Cecilia to that of St. Stephen, and in 1841 it was brought to this Gallery. — On wood. Dim. fig.

Vasari erroneously attributes it to Cimabue.

21. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XIV Cent.

The Virgin and Child attended by St. Michael and St. Matthew. Taken from the church of S. Angiolo di Nebbiano.

23. MARTINI Simone and MEMMI Lippo of Siena. — Simone born in 1285, died 1344. — Lippo born ..., died 1357.

The Annunciation. — This painting with the two ones which bear the numbers 8 and 10, formed one piece formerly, and hung in the Cathedral at Siena. It was then taken to St. Ansano church in Castelvechio, and in 1799 it was brought to this Gallery. — Inscribed: SIMON MARTINI ET LIPPUS MEMMI DE SENIS ME PINXERUNT ANNO DOMINI MCCCXXXIII. — On wood. Half life size figures.

19. TADDEO GADDI'S SCHOOL.

A half length Madonna, holding the infant Jesus.

In the pinnacle the Saviour and two prophets: in the gradino Pity and around her the Virgin, the Magdalene and six figures of other saints all diminutive and half length. — On wood.

22. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XIV Cent.

The Virgin and Child. Above the Annunciation, and below, two coats of arms and the words: ODI LAUTRA PARTE, from which it is supposed to have belonged to the suppressed Tribunal of Justice. — On wood.

27. GIOTTINO (?)

This precious work of the XIVth century was erroneously attributed by Vasari to a certain Tommaso di Stefano called Giottino, a Florentine painter.

Since two painters lived at the same time in Florence, one of whom was called Maso son of Banco, inscribed among the artists before 1343 and in the association of St. Luke (Compagnia di S. Luca) in 1350, and the other Giotto di Maestro Stefano called Giottino in order to distinguish him from his famous namesake, Vasari confused the two names, creating out of these two one imaginary artists whom he called Tommaso di Stefano called Giottino. What Vasari affirms about the author of this painting being then undoubtedly erroneous, the best modern critics have long endeavoured to find out whether it belonged to Maso di Banco or Giotto di Maestro Stefano; and although they did not succeed in giving a sure answer to this question, it is yet most probable, as Prof.^r Milanesi and some others remark, that this painting is the work of Maso di Banco, whom Philip Villani, Sacchetti and Ghiberti mention, and whom an unpublished document of that time calls a great master. — On wood.

28. GADDI Angelo, of Florence, son and pupil to Taddeo. Born about 1333, died 1396.

The Annunciation. Three small compositions are on the pedestal: the Nativity; the Epiphany; the Presentation in the temple. — On wood. Half life size fig.

29. NICCOLÒ DI PIERO GERINI, florentine painter. Inscribed among the artists on September 15th 1368, died in 1415.

The Saviour in the act of crowning his holy Mother. Underneath are some patron saints of Florence. In the gradino are seen the coats of arms of the Florentine Mint, which ordered this painting from Nicholas Gerini, who was helped in his work by master Simon, until Jacob of Lino another Florentine painter, completed in 1373.

Niccolò di Piero Gerini had been entirely forgotten among our painters and his name was only brought to light in 1820, when Latini engraved the representations of our Lord's passion in the assembly hall (capitolo) of St. Francis, where Niccolò had signed his name with the year in which he executed those frescoes.

This painting was taken to this Gallery from the suppressed office of the old Florentine Mint, on the 21st July 1863.

30. ANGELO GADDI'S SCHOOL.

31. IACOPO DEL CASENTINO. Flourished in the half of the XIV Cent.

The Coronation of the Virgin. A triptyc: St. Francis and St. John the Baptist, St. Ivo and St. Dominic in the side panels. In the pinnacles the Annunciation in two separate figures, the Virgin on one side, the angel on the other and Our Lord delivering souls from Limbo. — On wood. Half life size fig.

33. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XIV Cent.

A Saint giving alms to two beggars.

36. ORGAGNA (Andrea di Cione), a florentine painter, sculptor and architect. B. 1308, d. 1368.

The Annunciation. — On wood. Half life size.

32. MILANO (Giovanni da), pupil of Taddeo Gaddi. XIV Cent.

A picture in ten compartments, in gothic style. In each of the five compartments above are two saints: the compartments below which are smaller, contain each a number of diminutive figures of saints, divided in choirs. In the first to the right is the choir of the Prophets, in the second are the Patriarchs, in the 3^d the Apostles, in the 4th the Martyrs, in the 5th the Virgins.

This precious work had been recognised by Baron Rumhor as the one mentioned by Vasari, which Giovanni da Milano executed for the church of Ognissanti in Florence, where it was still in fact when it was purchased by the Government in 1860 to place it in this Gallery. — On wood. Dim. fig.

35. UNKNOWN. — Florentine school. XIV Cent.

St. Martin, on a white horse in the act of cutting his own cloak in two parts with his sword and giving it to a beggar who is standing before him. On gold back-ground. Two chalices in bas-relief on the frame represent the coat of arms of the Taver keepers. — On wood. Dim. fig.

34. UNKNOWN. — XV Cent.

The Virgin sitting and holding the infant Jesus in the act of benediction. Six angels in adoration are around his head. — On wood. With golden ornaments.

Taken from the monastery of Santa Verdiana.

40. LORENZO MONACO, of Florence. B. 1370, d. 1425.

The Virgin and St. John both kneeling and holding the body of our Saviour. Above are the scenes of the passion, below two coats of arms and an inscription with the date 1404. A lunette in distemper. — On wood. Life size. — Bought from Mr. William Spence, on the 5th of July 1882.

37. SPINELLO ARETINO. Born 1333 circa, died 1410.

The Calvary. In the foreground is the Virgin fainting in the arms of the Maries. At the foot of the cross are St. Mary Magdalene and St. John kneeling: to the right is a group of soldiers throwing dice for the Saviour's vesture. — On wood. Dim. fig.

This painting was purchased in 1870.

38. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XIV Cent.

The Holy Virgin and Child.

From the convent of St. Lucy in Via San Gallo in Florence.

39. LORENZO MONACO.

The Adoration of the Wise Men. This picture is very valuable on account of its composition, colouring and finish. The Annunciation and two Prophets which are seen above were not originally painted to adorn this picture, and are not equally antique. — On wood. Dim. fig.

41. THE SAME.

Triptyc. In the middle is the Virgin sitting on a throne with the divine Infant standing on her lap in the act of blessing. Behind the throne stand two angels in adoration. Right and left St. John the Baptist, St. Bartholemew, St. Taddeus and St. Benedict. In the three other compartments is the holy Saviour, the Angelical Messenger and the Virgin. Under the Madonna the words: « Ave gratia plena Dominus tecum. An. D. DCCCCX. » — On wood. Life size.

This painting was formerly in the subterranean oratory of the church of Monte Oliveto near Florence.

42. UNKNOWN. — XIV Cent.

The Virgin with the divine Infant enthroned. At her sides are two Saints. — On wood.

Purchased from Cavaliere Giuseppe Toscanelli for the price of L. 2750, and then believed to be a work of Cennini as the name of this author is written on the very painting, which signature is however now considered to be false.

43. STROZZI Zanobi, of the noble Strozzi family. A pupil of Fra Angelico. Born in Florence, on Nov. 17th 1412, died on Dec. 6th 1468.

Portrait of Giovanni Bicci de' Medici, in a red mantle. — On wood.

Vasari says: « In the Duke's storeroom were the portraits of Giovanni di Bicci de' Medici and Bartolommeo Valore, in one painting. » Now the commentators of Vasari affirm this portrait to be just that of Giovanni di Bicci de' Medici, which has been separated from the other in order to add, to the series of the portraits of the Medicis, that of this old countryman, who is the stock of the two branches of that princely family. It is also to be remarked that all other portraits of Giovanni di Bicci have been evidently copied from this one.

44. STROZZI Zanobi.

St. Lawrence, leaning on the gridiron, and holding a flag in his right hand and a book with a palm in the other. Above the figure of the saint, in a circular compartment is a half length figure of our Saviour. Two episodes of St. Lawrence's life are represented underneath on the base of the frame. — On wood. Life size.

45. BICCI di Lorenzo. Born 1350, died 1427.

St. Cosmus and St. Damian: two standing figures in full length. Above in the compartment, a half length the Eternal; in the base of the frame two compositions representing episodes in the lives of these saints in diminutive figures.

This picture, which is perhaps the only authentic one, that is known, of this artist, was executed in 1429 for Anthony Ghezzi della Casa, and hung then long at a pillar in the cathedral, untill it was taken to this Gallery in 1844. — On wood. Life size.

46. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XV Cent.

The Holy Virgin with Child, attended by St. Anthony, St. John, St Peter and St. Sthephen. — On wood. Dimin. fig.

52. UCCELLO Paolo, of Florence. Born 1397, died 1475.

A combat between horsemen. According to Vasari, this is one of the four pictures, which Paolo Uccello executed by commission from the Bartolini family of Via Valfonda, and which, being much damaged by time, were restored by Julian Bugiardini. A painting similar to this is in the National Gallery in London (N.^o 583) and represents the Battle of St. Egidio in 1416, where Braccio da Montone makes Malatesta, the Lord of Rimini, a prisoner. Vasari says that several of the figures in these paintings are intended for some renowned Captain of Fortune of that time. In the right hand corner one reads: PAULI UCELI OPUS. — On wood. Half life size fig.

53. BICCI (Neri di), of Florence. Born 1419, died 1491.

The Annunciation, and the Eternal hovering above.

Neri di Bicci in his Commentary mentions this painting, which he made in 1458 for the Compagnia di St. Andrea a Mosciano, as may be read in the inscription at the foot of the painting itself. — On wood. Half life size fig.

56. BALDOVINETTI Alessio, of Florence. Born 1422, died 1499.

The Annunciation. This paintings, which was originally made for the church of S. Giorgio sulla Costa, was believed to be lost, when it was rediscovered in the adjoining Monastery. It was brought to the Gallery in 1868. — On wood. Life size,

57. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XV Cent.

The preaching and martyrdom of St. Peter the Martyr. To the left the saint is preaching to a crowd of listeners, through which a demon in the form of a black horse is rushing, in order to disturb their pious attention. To the right the saint is seen whom a soldier is striking on the head with his sword.

This painting is in the old inventories attributed to Dello; a Florentine painter. — On wood. Dim. fig.

54. BICCI (Neri di).

The Holy Virgin. A two third length figure, sitting and turned to the left, with joined hands, and the divine child on her knees, with a pomegranate in his hands. Two angels hovering on each side are upholding a curtain. — On wood. Life size.

The Epiphany. This painting is also attributed to Dello as the N. 57. — On wood. Dim. fig.

60. BALDOVINETTI Alessio.

The Holy Virgin seated and holding the infant Saviour; attended by several saints. On her right St. John the Baptist, St. Cosmus, St. Damian, and St. Francis kneeling: on the left St. Laurenz, a hermit, another saint, and St. Dominic kneeling.

This picture hung formerly in the chapel of the royal villa of Cafaggiolo, and was brought to this Gallery in 1796. — On wood. Half life size fig.

62. UNKNOWN. — Tuscan school. XV Cent.

The game of the owl. Some young people playing at the game vulgarly called la civetta (the owl) on an small square, by the gate of a town. The architecture of the buildings and the dresses of the people are Florentine.

Purchased on the 17th March 1781, from a certain

J. Perini, at the price of 20 Zequins. — On wood. Dim. fig.

63. ROSSELLI Cosimo, of Florence. Born 1439, died 1507.

The Coronation of the Virgin. — On wood. Dimin. figures.

66. BOTTICELLI'S SCHOOL.

The banquet of Ahasuerus to the Lords of his kingdom. On the left under a bower is a laid table where Ahasuerus is sitting in the midst of his princes, with three musicians in the back-ground.

Some Lords come towards the table, two of whom approaching it, kneel down. On the right Ahasuerus followed by four Lords is represented walking along a portico, where a fountain stands. An old man of quality is kneeling at his feet; on the foreground of this scene there is a deer. — On wood. Dim. fig.

This painting with the two following ones (67 and 68) decorated the sides of an old trunk and were purchased on the 6th of June 1781 from a certain Giuseppe Morellini, carpenter, at the price of six zequins.

See the register of the year 1781, volume XIV, to be found in the archives of the Royal Gallery.

67. THE SAME.

The banquet of the queen Vasthi, wife of Ahasuerus. On the right Vasthi is sitting at the table in the midst of five ladies of honour while the eunuchs are coming to her with the order to go to Ahasuerus. On the left the arrest of Haman. — On wood. Small figures. — See note to N. 66.

65. ROSSELLI Cosimo, of Florence. Born 1439, died 1507.

The Adoration of the Wise Men. This picture contains several portraits, among which, according to Vasari, is that of Donato Acciajoli. Although Lanzi in his History of Painting mentions this picture as existing in this Gallery yet it remained hidden and ignored, until 1857, among the paintings which were kept, excluded from the sight of the public, in the Corridor, then shut and unfrequented, which unites the Palazzo Vecchio to the Pitti Palace, and now the Ufizi and the Pitti Galleries. Vasari attributes this work to Pessello, but senator Morelli, in his book: Le opere dei Maestri Italiani nelle Gallerie di Monaco, Dresda, Berlino; Bologna, 1886, p. 353, thinks it to be rather the work of Cosimo Rosselli. — On wood. Half life size fig.

68. BOTTICELLI'S SCHOOL.

Exaltation of Mordecai. He is seen of the left, dressed in royal vestments, riding on a horse richly harnessed, and preceded by Haman; on his way he is met by two children and two men who, stretching out their hands, applaud him. On the back-ground, beyond a terrace Haman is seen hanged. On the right, Ahasuerus, with Esther at his side, walking under a portico. They are advancing towards a door, close to which Haman is sleeping. In the foreground the king and queen are talking with Mordecai who is sitting. — On wood. Small figures. — See note to N. 66.

Original Drawings of ancient great Masters.

The Florentine Gallery already possessed one of the rarest collections of original drawings by the greatest Masters (about 40,000) when in 1866 the distinguished sculptor Prof. Emilio Santarelli, added the splendid present of his own collection, consisting of not less than 12,461 pieces.

We cannot certainly give here a detailed and general catalogue of such a considerable number of works, and must therefore confine ourselves to affording a few historical notice concerning these unrivalled drawings.

George Vasari in his biographies of the Artists (Vite d'Artefici) often speaks of an album he possessed, in which he had gathered several drawings of the most celebrated Italian Artists of his time. He also mentions a similar collection made by Vincenzo Borghini. Of this no notice has reached us; but as to that of Vasari it is almost certain that the greatest part of the drawings were purchased by Cardinal Leopold de' Medici, and were the nucleus of the present collection.

Several drawings, by Gaddi, Michelozzi and Hugford, were then added and in 1709 they were all taken from Palazzo Pitti to this Gallery, where however a few of them were shown to the public, and not before 1854.

In 1866 a new selection of the best pieces of the collection was brought out and ranged with the others in the corridor which runs over the Ponte Vecchio, and finally in 1882 they were provisionally taken into these rooms where their preservation is better secured.

In 1891 another great part of drawings has been exhibited in the first and second corridor, in manner that all drawings have been definitively and rationally classified.

They are subdued in two great categories: the first, who is in the three halls, comprehends the drawings of masters of all schools, from the XIII Century till the first half of the XVI; the second, who is sistemated in the two mentioned corridors, is formed by the drawings of the second half of the XVI Century till the end of the XVII.

We give here simply the names of the principal artists to whom the most remarkable of these drawings belong, in order to give an idea of the extraordinary importance of this famous collection.

Sketch and Pastel Rooms
& the Collection of small Portraits.

The first of these two rooms originally contained the collection of paintings presented by the Marquis Paolo Feroni and since transferred to the Cenacolo di Foligno in Via Faenza; in the second were exhibited the bronzes, now removed to the National Museum in this city.

At present the halls contain all the drawings which were on view in one of the rooms of the Gallery of Ancient and Modern Art, many of them by Fra Bartolommeo, Baroccio, Allori, Raphaël, Andrea and Pocetti, together with architectural and ornamental designs placed in frames around two of the columns, and a number of sketches taken from the store-rooms, including many by S. Rosa, Baroccio, Zuccheri, Parmigianino, Bassano, Tintoretto, Pinelli, Beccafumi, Vasari, Manetti, Sorri and Cigoli. In the second hall is to be seen a collection of life-size portraits in pastel, many being by Giovanna Fratellini and some by Volterrano, a collection of small portraits of the highest interest and exceptional delicacy, and a number of miniatures among which are examples by Giulio Clovio and Stefaneschi.

Portraits

of ancient and modern painters

painted by themselves

First and second Hall.

This precious and unique collection of portraits of celebrated painters, painted by themselves, is principally owed to Cardinal Leopoldo de' Medici.

He began by purchasing a great number of those which were in the Academy of S. Luca in Rome, and then he invited all the most famous painters of his time to send their portraits, still continuing to collect as many of the ancient ones as he succeeded in finding.

Cosimo III de' Medici gathered them all in this room, about the year 1681, and had the statue of his uncle, the Cardinal Leopoldo, erected here in a nich, as a monument of his munificence. This statue is by Gio. Battista Foggini, and the latin inscription on the base is by Henry Newton, who was then in Florence, as an ambassador from the English court to the Grand-Duke.

This collection was then much enriched by Pietro Leopoldo of Lorraine who purchased a good number of such portraits from the Abbé Pazzi, and is still growing year by year, with those of the contemporary artists, whose celebrity makes them worthy of being admitted into this Pantheon.

The order adopted in arranging these portraits is as follows:

On the right wall and half of that opposite the entrance door are the portraits of the native painters of south Italy; on the other half of that wall and on the left one are the portraits of painters from north Italy; and finally on the same side as the door the portraits of old foreign artists are collected.

The second hall chiefly contains the most recent portraits, many of which represent artists still living, either foreign or italian.

The most remarkable among the ancient ones, are those of Raffaello, Leonardo, Perugino, Andrea del Sarto, Masaccio (1), Michelangiolo, Guido Romano, the founders of the Tuscan and Roman School, and Parmigianino, Giorgione, Tiziano, Paolo Veronese, Tintoretto, Bassano, Palma, Morone, etc.: the chief masters of the Lombard and Venetian School. The Bolognese School is also represented by its principal masters, as Domenichino, Guercino, the two Caracci, Primiticcio, Guido Reni, Albano, etc.

Among the foreign old painters those worthiest of mention are: Albert Durer, Luke of Leyden, Holbein, Rubens, Van-Dyck, Rembrandt, Gerard Dow, Substermans, Bourguignon, Vivien, Liotard, Nanteuil, etc.

The most interesting among the modern portraits of this collection are those of: Raphael Mengs, Batoni, Appiani, Reynolds, Angelica Hauffmann, Mme Lebrun, Overbeck, Gagneraux, Ingres, Benvenuti, Sabatelli, Bezzuoli, Hayez, Malatesta, that of the celebrated sculptor Canova, also painted by himself, and those of Zorn, Lehman, Hamon, Cabanel, Amerling, Hebert, Millay, Watson, Laurent, Canevari, Ussi, Ciseri, Mussini, Cassioli, Heyden, Leighton, Millais, Nani, etc., many of whom are still living.

Corridor leading to the Hall of Lorenzo Monaco.

The two first traits of this corridor belongs to the Collection of Portraits of Painters painted by themselves, in the third trait are exhibited the following paintings:

1282. GRANACCI Francesco.

Joseph presenting his father and brothers to Pharaon.
— On wood. Dim. fig.

3387. ROSA Salvatore.

Job. In one angle is Job seating and nude and in the other are many figures one of which in complete armature. — On canv. Life size.

1249. GRANACCI Francesco.

Joseph conduced in prison. A landscape in the background. — On wood. Dim. fig.

203. RENI Guido.

Bradamante in a military costume, standing by a fountain, listening to the account of Ruggero's sad adventures made by Fiordespina. (Ariosto, Orlando Furioso, canto I). — On canvas. Half life size.

This painting, was in the Casino Mediceo, in Piazza di S. Marco, and was brought to this Gallery in 1667.

637. BASSANO.

Dead Christ and the three Marys; a large painting, with an admirable night effect. — On canvas. Life size.

597. TINTORETTO'S SCHOOL.

Entry of Christ into Jerusalem. — On canvas. Dim. figures.

Hall of Lorenzo Monaco.

17. ANGELICO (Fra Giovanni), of Fiesole. Born near Vicchio di Mugello in Tuscany in 1387, died 1455.

A tabernacle with two doors. Within the tabernacle is the Holy Virgin with the Infant Saviour standing on her knee: twelve little angels playing on different instruments are painted all around. The figure of the Virgin is above life size. The internal parts of the doors bears the figures of St. John the Baptist and St. Mark: on the exterior are St. Peter and again St. Mark.

This remarkable work was committed to Fra Angelico on the 11th of July 1433, by the Association of the flax-weavers (Arte de' Linaiooli) for the price of 190 golden florins, and was brought to this Gallery in 1777.

The gradino contain three different subjects: Preaching of St. Peter; Adoration of the Kings, and Martyrdom of St. Mark. — On wood. Dim. fig.

1297. GHIRLANDAIO (Domenico Bigordi, called Domenico del), of Florence.

The Holy Virgin with the Infant Jesus, attended by four angels; St. Michael and St. Raphael, left and right of the throne, and St. Zenobius and St. Just kneeling before it. The background is richly decorated with architecture and landscape. — On wood. Life size.

This painting was made for the church of St. Just of the Jesuits, near Florence, and after the distruction of that church, during the famous siege in 1530, it was taken to the little church of St. John, called La Calza, by Porta Romana, also in Florence, and was finally purchased by the Government and brought to this Gallery in 1857.

1286. BOTTICELLI Alessandro.

The adoration of the Kings. A very fine work, particularly remarkable for its composition and perfect drawing, as well as for the sentiment which the whole painting expresses. The figures are probably the portraits of some illustrious personages of the time: those of Cosmus the Elder, Julian and John are well recognisable. — On wood. Half life size.

Vasari mentions this work as existing in the church of Santa Maria Novella; in the XVII century it was taken to the Villa del Poggio Imperiale, and was brought to this Gallery in 1796.

24. CREDI (Lorenzo di), of Florence. Born 1459, died 1537.

The Holy Virgin adoring the Divine Infant, with an angel. — On wood. Dimin. fig.

1305. DOMENICO VENEZIANO. Died on may 15th 1461.

The Holy Virgin enthroned, holding the Divine Infant on her lap. On her right are St. John the Baptist and St. Francis, on the left St. Nicholas and St. Lucy. On the lower edge of the picture an inscription as follow: OPUS DOMINICI DE VENETIIS. HO MATER DEI MISERERE MEI DATUM EST. — On wood. Half life size fig.

This splendid painting formely belonged to the church of Santa Lucia de' Magnoli, Via de' Bardi in Florence: and was taken to the Gallery in 1862.

1309. DON LORENZO MONACO, of Florence. Born about 1370, died 1422.

The coronation of the Virgin. A tryptic, admirable for the number and beauty of the different paintings it contains. The Coronation of our Lady amidst a glory of sixteen angels is painted in the middle panel; the two others bear ten figures of saints each. Several smaller figures are scattered among the various ornaments of the frame. On the pinnacles above the principal panels is the Holy Trinity, left and right of which are: the Virgin announced and Gabriel. The gradino contains six diminutive compositions, four of which represent some scenes from the life of St. Bernard, and the two others The Birth of our Lord and The Adoration of the Mages. Between the tryptic and the gradino there is an inscription in golden letters, with the following words: HEC · TABVLA · FACTA · EST · PRO ANIMA · ZENOBI · CECCHI · FRASCHE · ET · SVORUM · IN · RECOMPENSATIONE · VNIVS · ALTERIVS · TABVLE · PER · EVM · IN · HOC... (LA) VRENTII · IOHANNIS · ET · SVORUM · MONACHI HVIVS · ORDINIS · QVI · EAM · DEPINXIT · ANNO DOMINI · MCCCCXIII · MENSE · FEBRVARII · TEMPORE · DOMINI · MATHEI · PRIORIS · HVIVS MONASTERII.

This painting is one of the few works of this famous artist which could be preserved to our time. It was made in 1413 for the high altar in the church of the Monastery called degli Angioli to which Don Lorenzo belonged; but about the end of the sixteenth century it was removed from that place, and people then believed it lost, until it was found out again in 1830 in the Abbey of St. Peter at Cerreto near Certaldo, by the commentators of Vasari, in an artistic journey in Val d' Elsa. This splendid master-piece contains more than a hundred figures altogether. It was brought to this Gallery in 1866, and restored under the direction of Mr. Ector Franchi.

1302. GOZZOLI Benozzo, of Florence. Born 1420, died 1498.

Gradino. In the middle a Pietà; left and right: St. John and St. Mary Magdalene; St. Catherine's bridal with the divine Child, St. Anthony, and Benedictine saint. — On wood. Dimin. fig.

It was taken to this Gallery from the convent of Santa Croce of Florence in 1847.

1310. GENTILE da Fabriano. Born at Fabriano, near Ancona, in 1370, d. at Roma about the end of 1450.

St. Mary Magdalene, St. Nicholas of Bari, St. John and St. Georges. An Ancona which formerly decorated the high altar of the church of San Niccolo in Florence, and was given to this Gallery by its owner, the marquis Quaratesi in 1879. The middle panel containing a Madonna is lost, and no one knows how or when. The gradino which Vasari mentions is also wanting, but a part of it is now possessed by the Puccini family at Pistoia.

This painting before being mutilated bore an inscription with the following words: OPVS GENTILIS DE FABRIANO MCCCCXXV. MENSE MAI.

1224. GHIRLANDAIO (Domenico Bigordi, called Domenico del), of Florence.

The Virgin Mary sitting in the open country with the infant Jesus on her knees and St. Joseph on her left.

1296. VERDI Francesco di Urbino, called il Bachiacca, pupil of Pietro Perugino. Born 1494, died on october 5th 1557.

Gradino with three scenes in the life of St. Acasius. In the middle one Acasius is seen at the head of a Roman legion, defeating the rebels by the help of some angels; the left one represents the Saint and his companions, instructed by Angels and baptized: in the third scene St. Acasius is represented with his companions, crucified on the mount Ararat. — On wood. Dim. fig.

This gradino, belonged to the altar of the Medici chapel in San Lorenzo, and was purchased for this Gallery in 1860.

- 39. BOTTICELLI (Alessandro Filippini, of Florence, called).
Born 1447, died 1510.

The birth of Venus. The goddess is standing on an open sea-shell in the middle of a calm sea. On the left side two winds are figured, flying over the waves and pushing the goddess towards the shore; to the right is the figure of a girl, representing Spring. — On canvas. Life size.

Brought to the Gallery from the rooms of the Royal Palace in 1815.

The author himself made a present of this portrait and that of the Countess of Albany (N. 689) to this Gallery in 1824. — Behind this is the following autographic sonnet by Alfieri:

Sublime specchio di veraci detti,
 Mostrami in corpo e in anima qual sono.
 Capelli or radi in fronte e rossi pretti;
 Lunga statura e capo a terra prono;
 Sottil persona in su due stinchi schietti:
 Bianca pelle, occhi azzurri, aspetto buono;
 Giusto naso, bel labbro, e denti eletti,
 Pallido in volto, più che un re sul trono:
 Or duro, acerbo; ora pieghevol, mite;
 Irato sempre e non maligno mai;
 La mente e il cor meco in perpetua lite:
 Per lo più mesto, e talor lieto assai;
 Or stimandomi Achille, ed or Tersite:
 Uom, se' tu grande o vil? Muori, il saprai.

An authographic sonnet by Alfieri, is written behind, as follows:

Di quanti ha pregi la mia donna eccelsi,
(Cui più il conoscer che il narrar m'è dato)
Quello per cui me da me stesso io svelsi,
È il cor d'alta bontà sì ben dotato.
Questa in mille virtù da prima io scelsi.
E più assai che beltade hammi allacciato:
Questa dopo anni ed anni, ancor riscelsi
Per vera base al mio viver beato.
Non che i suoi brevi sdegni ella non senta;
Nè che pur tarda od impassibil sia:
Ma vie men sempre al perdonare è lenta.
Nel suo petto non entra invidia ria;
I benefizi al doppio ognor rammenta;
Le offese, in un coll' offensore, oblia.

698. GOES (Hugh Van der), of Bruges or of Ghent. — XV Cent.

The Holy Virgin, sitting and holding her Divine Son on her arm. St. Catherine and another Saint. A painting worthy of particular remark for its fineness and skill of execution.

The works of this painter are very rare, particularly in the Flanders, as the greatest part of them were executed in Italy. On these the most remarkable is the large painting which he made for the church of Santa Maria Nuova in Florence, by commission of the Portinari family. — On wood. Dim. fig.

According to Prof. John Semper's recent opinion this painting is however to be attributed to Henry Aldegrever rather than to Goes (See Arte e Storia, January 24th 1886, N. 3, Anno V).

Taken from the store-rooms of the Pitti Palace in 1795. — On canvas. Above half length.

1136. PAOLO VERONESE (Paolo Caliari, called).

Holy Family and St. Catherine. The Virgin is near her Child, who is lying on a linen cloth and asleep. St. Joseph to her left; St. Catherine to the right, and young St. John kissing Jesus' feet. The figures are half length, with the exception of the Divine Child who is in full length.

This painting was purchased by Cardinal Leopold de' Medici in 1654, from the collection of Paolo del Sera, a florentin merchant, who had settled in Venice.

It was placed in this Gallery in 1798. — On canvas. Life size.

1117. TIZIANO.

Venus reposing on a bed, which is believed to be a portrait of the Duke of Urbino's mistress. She is completely nude, lying on a bed covered with white draperies. A little dog is sleeping at her feet. In the back-ground at a distance are two maids, one of whom is kneeling before a trunk, from which she is taking her lady's dresses, while the other is standing by it. — See N.^o 1108. — Engraved by Strange. — On wood. Life size.

This famous painting is mentioned in the principal histories of fine arts, and particularly by Vasari and Algarotti.

1115. DYCK (Anthony Van), born at Antwerp in 1599, died at Blackfriars, near London, in 1641. — Flemish School.

Jean de Monfort. — The bust. Life size. On canvas.

1120. RAFFAELLO SANZIO.

Portrait of a young woman, in full face, dressed after the florentine fashion. Around her neck is a golden chain, from which a little cross is hanging. It was for-mely believed to be the portrait of Magdalene Strozzi the wife of Angel Doni, and just bears the name of that lady in an engraving by Jerome Scotto.

This painting belongs to the first style of Raphael and is still in a state of perfect preservation. It was taken from the grand-ducal villa of Poggio a Cajano in 1713. — A half length. Life size. On wood.

1121. MANTEGNA Andrea?

Elizabeth wife of Guidobaldo da Montefeltro, duke of Urbino. — The bust, in full face. On wood. Life size.

1140. RUBENS Peter Paul.

Hercules between Vice and Virtue. The hero is sitting between Venus who caresses him, and Minerva who presents him some arms and a white steed, which is led by a young man. An allegorical figure of Time and a little Cupid are hovering above the scene. The hovering Cupid tries to remove the goddess: another one is standing by Hercules and caressing his leg.

The back-ground represents a landscape with two figures in the distance. — On canvas. Half life size.

1123. RAFFAELLO SANZIO?

Portrait of a woman. This beautiful portrait with the date 1512 marked out in the ancient inventory of the Gallery as the portrait of a young unknown woman and attributed to Raphael, afterwards attributed to Giorgione and in the last years of the last century again to Raphael, named « La Fornarina, » was believed to be the portrait of the beloved woman of Raphael, which Vasari declared to exist in Florence in the house of the florentine merchant Matteo Botti.

Modern critics nevertheless maintain the doubt on the person which it represents and many of them attribute the painting to Sebastiano Del Piombo who at that time followed Raphael's school.

Dr. Cav. Enrico Ridolfi, Director of the Galleries of Florence, in one of his works on some celebrated portraits of these Galleries (Archivio Storico dell'Arte, fasc. VI, Anno IV, Roma, Unione Cooperativa Editrice) has proved with documents that this portrait is not, as it was believed, that of Raphael's beloved woman painted by him, of which Vasari spoke, finding it beautiful and possessed by the florentine merchant Matteo Botti and which Borghini and Bocchi also saw in his house, but that a portrait the only one authentic of the lover of Sanzio, because acknowledged by the contemporary writers, is instead, the very remarkable painting in the Pitti Gallery known under the name of the Donna Velata, which from the Palazzo Botti was transferred to that of the Medici in 1620 with the inheritance of the Marquis Matteo Botti grand child of the rich merchant mentioned by Vasari, and last of that family.

The portrait of the Gallery Pitti called La Velata is therefore the only one who has really the right of being called La Fornarina.

1124. FRANCIA (Raibolini Francesco, called), of Bològna. B. 1450, d. 1517.

Portrait of Evangelist Scappi, in full face, holding a letter on which his name, E. Scappi, is written. — A life size half length. A landscape in the back-ground. — On wood.

1125. RAFFAELLO SANZIO.

The Virgin of the well. Our Lady is sitting and holding her divine Child, who is in the act of embracing her. Young St. John is standing to her right side, showing to the Infant Jesus a sheet of paper on which are the words: Ecce Agnus etc. The back-ground represents a landscape, in which the ruins of an old castle are seen and several figures around a well. — On wood. Half life size.

1126. FRA BARTOLOMMEO DELLA PORTA, born near Prato, in Tuscany, in 1475; died in the Convent of St. Marco, in Florence, in 1517.

The prophet Isaiah. Full figure, sitting and holding a large paper-roll in his left hand with the words: Ecce Deus Salvator Meus. — On wood. Life size. — See N.^r 1130.

1127. RAFFAELLO SANZIO.

St. John in the desert. Full figure; sitting on a piece of stone. He is nude, with the exception of a part of the right thigh which is covered by a panther skin. His right hand is pointing to a little cross simply formed of two reeds and fastened to the trunk of a tree. The back-ground represents a wild and desert landscape.

This famous painting is perhaps the only work by Raphael which is made on canvas. It belongs to Raphael's last style and was executed by commission of Cardinal Colonna, who made a present of it to the physician James de Carpi, who asked for it after having cured the Cardinal of a dangerous disease. At the time of Vasari this painting was in possession of Francis Benintendi in Florence, but it was already in this Gallery in 1589. The original sketch of this St. John in red pencil is also possessed by the Gallery, in its collection of drawings of the old master. — On wood. Life size.

1129. RAFFAELLO SANZIO.

The Virgin of the Goldfinch. The Madonna is sitting in a pleasant country, her Divine Child standing between her knees. She holds an open book by her left hand, and by the right she softly draws young St. John towards the Infant Jesus, to whom he offers a little Goldfinch to caress.

This painting which belongs to Raphael's first style, was executed by commission for Laurence Nasi in 1548, whose house then falling into ruin, this precious painting was torn into several pieces, but John Baptist Nasi, Laurence's son had it restored as well as it was possible. — Engraved by Morghen, Martinet, P. Nocchi etc. — On wood. Smaller than life.

1130. FRA BARTOLOMMEO DELLA PORTA.

The prophet Job. A figure, sitting and holding an unfolded paper-roll, inscribed: « Ipse erit Salvator meus. »

This painting, as well as N.^r 1126, were executed by commission for Salvator Belli, a Florentine merchant, and with the large one representing the Resurrection of our Saviour and the Evangelists, which is now in the Pitti Gallery (N.^r 159), they decorated one of the chapels in the SS. Annunziata church in Florence. Cardinal Charles de' Medici purchased it for his collection in 1666. — On canvas. Life size.

1110. ALFANI Orazio di Domenico. Born at Perugia about 1540, d. 1583.

Holy Family. The Virgin sitting and holding her divine Child on her arm; St. Elisabeth and young St. John. A landscape in the back-ground. — On canvas. Dim. fig.

1132. CORREGGIO (Allegri Antonio, called).

The head of St. John on a dish, with a cross and a papyrus bearing the inscription: Ecce Agnus, etc.

Taken from the Royal Villa del Poggio Imperiale. — On canvas.

1133. CARACCI Annibal.

A Bacchante; seen from behind. The god Pan hands over to her a cup full of grapes, a young satyr embraces one of her legs, while a little cupid in the air, is bringing some flowers to her. — On canvas. Life size.

1134. CORREGGIO.

The Holy Virgin adoring her Child. The Virgin is kneeling in the act of adoring the Infant Jesus who is lying on the ground upon the edge of her mantle. The back-ground represents a portico, behind which a pleasant landscape is seen.

This painting was given by the Duke of Mantua to Cosmus III de' Medici, and was placed in this Gallery in 1617. Half life size.

1135. LUINI Bernardino, of Luino, near Milano. Born 1460, died 1530.

Herodias attended by her maid, in the act of handing a dish to the executioner, to receive St. John's head, which he holds by the hair and gives to the princess. Half length.

This painting was formerly attributed to Leonardo da Vinci, but it was then recognised as the work of his pupil Bernardino Luini. It was discovered in the store-rooms of the Pitti Palace in 1793. — On canvas. Dim. fig.

1118. CORREGGIO.

After the flight into Egypt. The Madonna sitting in the shade of some plants, holds her divine Child on her arms while St. Joseph is gathering some dates from a palm-tree. St. Francis is kneeling before the Virgin.

This painting was executed for the church of the Franciscans in Parma, for the price of 100 golden ducates. Many accounts about its authenticity are given in Lanzi's Storia Pittorica. It is doubtful how this painting has ever come to belong to this Gallery. — On canvas. Dim. fig.

1138. CRANAK Luke.

Eve. Standing and holding the apple. — The same size than Adam. (N.^r 1142). — Bearing the author's monogram and the date 1528. — On wood. Life size.

1139. BUONARROTI Michelangiolo, b. 1475, d. 1564.

The holy Family. Our Lady is kneeling and lifting her divine Child to St. Joseph who stands behind her. Several diminutive figures of nude men are in the background. — Painted on a round board.

This precious work is the most authentic among Michelangelo's paintings. It was executed by commission of Angel Doni, of Florence, for the price of 70 ducats. But as Messer Doni only sent 40 to Michelangelo, he refused the sum and asked for 100. Messer Doni then sent the 70 ducats he had promised at first; but at Michelangelo still refused the sum, he was forced to give 70 ducats again so that he had to pay at last the double of what he had previously settled.

1128. DYCK (Anthony Van).

Portrait of Charles V. A figure in full length, in armour, on the back of a white steed. An eagle is hovering and bearing a laurel wreath over its head. — It belongs to the Gallery since 1804. — On canvas. Life size.

1116. TIZIANO.

Portrait of Monsignor Beccadelli, of Bologna; sitting on an arm-chair and holding a paper, on which one reads: JULIUS P. P. III. « Venerabili Fratri Ludovico Episcopo Ravennensi, apud Dominum Venetorum nostro et Apostolicæ sedis Nuntio, cum annum age- ret LII. Titianus Vecellius faciebat, Venetiis M. D. L. II mense Julii. » And a little lower, with the same writing: Translatus deinde M. D. L. V. die XVIII Septembris a Paulo quarto Pont. Maximo ad Archiepiscopatum Ragusinum, quo pervenit die IX Decembris proxime subsequentis. » — This portrait was then executed in 1552 while Monsignor Beccadelli was in Venice as a papal legate. — On canvas. Life size.

1182. BOTTICELLI (Alessandro Filippesi, called).

Calumny, according to the description of Appelles' painting, by Lucian. Calumny is in the middle of the painting, attended by two women, representing Hypocrisy and Treachery, both busy in dressing her hair. She holds a torch in her right hand, and by the left she is dragging a strengthless and naked young man along upon the ground, who is crying and raising his hands and look to heaven in the act of prayer, and is the symbol of Innocence. A hideous black figure meaning Evil precedes the group. Behind is another personage with Midas' ears, sitting on a throne and listening to what two other women (Ignorance and Distrust) are whispering to him, while he stretches his right arm towards Calumny, in the act of approving what she is doing. Aside is another strange figure, the symbol of Repentance or Remorse who turns himself and looks at Truth, a fine nude girl all modest and pleasant in her demeanour, who is coming on alone.

The back-ground represents a hall in a Royal Palace with fine columns and statues.

By the time of Vasari this painting belonged to Messer Fabio Segni a florentine noble man, and after to Anthony Segni. — On wood. Dim. fig.

The Holy Virgin with the Infant Jesus and St. Catherine.

1257. LIPPI Filippo, of Florence, called Filippino Lippi. Born 1457, died 1504.

Adoration of the Kings. A large and rich composition of which many figures are the portraits of well known personages of that time, particularly of the Medici family, among whom is Peter Francis the elder's, under the figure of an astrologer, to the left on the fore-ground.

This painting was executed in 1496 for the convent of San Donato degli Scopetini. On the reverse of it is the following original inscription: FILIPPUS ME PINXIT DE LIPIS, FLORENTINUS, ADDI 29 DI MARZO 1496. — On wood. Dim. fig.

1258. LOMI born Gentileschi Artemisia, of Pisa. Born 1590, died 1646.

Judith, in the act of killing Holophernes. A large painting. The figures are above life size. On canvas.

1268. LIPPI Filippino.

The Holy Virgin enthroned. To her right St. Victor and St. John the Baptist, to the left St. Bernard and St. Zanobius: above two angels supporting a long festoon, and still higher the coat of arms of the Florentine community. On the lower edge of the picture one reads: ANNO SALUTIS 1485 DIE 20 FEBRUARII.

This painting had been made to adorn the hall called degli Otto di Pratica in the Palace of the Signoria in Firenze. — On wood. Above life size.

1261. CHIMENTI Iacopo, called l'Empoli, of Empoli, near Florence. Born 1551, died 1640.

St. Ives reading the petition presented to him by the widows and orphans. This painting is one of the finest works of this artist, who made it for the Warden of the orphans in Florence in 1616, as it is read in an inscription on the back-ground. — On wood. Life size.

1284. PONTORMO (Carrucci Iacopo, called).

Cupid kissing Venus; from a carton by Michael-Angelo. The goddess is all nude and lying on a blue cloth stretched on the ground. A diadem adorns her forehead. Her son softly approaches her in order to kiss her, while she furtively puts an arrow into his quiver. To the right is an altar covered with a brown cloth on which a bundle of darts lays with a cup full of roses, from which the mask of a satyr and that of a young man hang. Before the altar is a young man prostrated and deprived of his right arm. All these symbols seem to mean the frailty of the pleasures of Love.

This painting was long deposited in the store-rooms of the Grand-Duke and the figure of Venns had been covered with a white drapery painted in oil; but in 1850 it was cleverly cleaned and restored and placed in the Academy of Fine Arts whence it was taken to this Gallery in 1861. — On wood. Larger than life.

1272. BRONZINO Angelo, of Florence. Born 1502, d. 1572.

1251. FRANCESCHINI Baldassarre, of Volterra called il Volterrano. Born 1611, d. 1689.

An Augustinian monk, supposed to be the portrait of the celebrated Fra Paolo Sarpi.

Placed in this Gallery in 1794. — Above half length. — On canvas. Life size.

1265. FRA BARTOLOMMEO DELLA PORTA.

A large painting sketched in black and white, representing the Holy Virgin enthroned, bearing the infant Jesus on her lap. By the Virgin is young St. John and behind her is St. Anne looking up in adoration to the Holy Trinity which is represented above in a glory of several angels all playing different instruments. Left and right of the throne are the figures of then Saints protectores of Florence: the second one to the right is the portrait of the painter. Two little angels are sitting on the steps of the throne.

This painting which was to be one of the most remarkable works of Fra Bartolommeo, has remained unfinished in consequence of his death. — It was meant to decorate the room of the Council of the Republic in Florence, but under the government of the Medicis, it was placed in the church of St. Lawrence, whence it was later brought to this Gallery. — On wood. Life size.

1266. BRONZINO Angelo.

Portrait af a man in a black suit and cap. Behind is a table upon which is a female statuette. — On wood. Life size.

Prof. Milanese thinks this to be the portrait of Santi Alberighi, son of John Alberighi called della Cammilla, who was a sculptor like his father and is known to have sculptured a Venus.

1267. PONTORMO (Carrucci Iacopo, called), of Florence. Born 1494, d. 1557.

1112. VANNUCCI Andrea, called Andrea del Sarto, of Florence. Born 1486, died 1531.

Madonna, between St. Francis and St. John the Evangelist, called Madonna delle Arpie. — The Virgin is standing on a pedestal, holding the Infant Jesus on her right arm, and a book with the left; St. Francis is also standing to her right and St. John to the left. On the pedestal is the following inscription: AND. SAR. FLOR. FAC. AD. SUMMU. REGINA. TRONU. DEFERTUR. IN. ALTUM. MDXVII.

This work is one of the most famous by Andrea, who executed it for the convent of the Franciscans in Florence. Prince Ferdinand de' Medici purchased it and ordered that a copy of it should be made by Francis Petrucci and put into the place of the original, which was then taken to the Pitti Palace, whence it was finally brought to this Gallery in 1785, by the order of Peter Leopold. — On wood. Life size.

1269. VASARI Giorgio, of Arezzo. Born 1511, d. 1574.

Portrait of Lawrence de' Medici, called il Magnifico. — A half length. Life size. On wood.

1270. PONTORMO (Iacopo Carrucci, called).

Portrait of Cosmus I de' Medici. A standing full figure. — On wood. Life size.

1271. BRONZINO Angelo, of Florence. B. 1502, d. 1572.

The descent of our Saviour into Hell; a large and rich composition and the most remarkable work of this painter. Vasari says that the principal figures of this painting are portraits of the most known men and the finest florentine ladies of that time; Iacopo Pontormo;

Gio. Battista Gello, the celebrated florentine academician, and the painter Bachiaccio among the men; Costanza de Somaia wife of Gio. Battista Doni, and Camilla Tedaldi del Corno among the ladies. — Signed: « MDLII. Opera del Bronzino Fiorentino. »

This painting formerly decorated the altar of the Zanchini chapel in Santa Croce. Leopoldo Ricasoli who was the owner of this painting at the beginning of the present century, gave it to the Gallery in 1821. — Above life size. On wood.

1256. ROSSI Francesco, called Cecchin Salviati, of Florence. B. 1510, d. 1563.

Portrait of a man, in the act of unsealing a letter. (Half length). — On wood. Life size.

44. GRAZIADEI Mariano, of Pescia, pupil of Rodolfo Ghirlandajo. He died when still young, about 1551.

The Holy Virgin, St. John and St. Anna. This painting was made for the chapel of the Signoria in Palazzo Vecchio, and according to Lanzi it is probably the only remaining work of this painter. — On wood. Life size.

1254. ANDREA DEL SARTO (Vannucci Andrea, called).

St. James with two children kneeling on each side of him, dressed in the white gown of the brothers of the Confraternity called del Nicchio for which this painting was made. — It was taken to this Gallery in 1795. — On canvas. Life size.

1274. BILIVERTI Giovanni, of Florence. B. 1585, d. 1644.

Chastity of Joseph. The youth is in the act of flying from the arms of Putiphar's wife, who is jumping out of her bed to arrest him and is only able catch hold of his cloak.

This painting was executed in 1624 by commission of Cardinal Charles and Lawrence de' Medici. — On wood. Life size.

1275. GHIRLANDAIO (Bigordi Rodolfo del), of Florence. Born 1483, d. 1561.

St. Zanobius bishop of Florence restoring to life a french lady's child who had fallen from a window.

The miracle is wrought in the presence of a great number of people and the mother of the child who is full of gratefulness and amazement.

This splendid painting as well as N^r 1277 which is quite of the same size and represents another miracle of the same saint had been made for the Confraternity of St. Zanobius, but they were later brought into the Academy of Fine Arts, and in 1794 they were taken to this Gallery. — On wood. Life size.

1259. ALBERTINELLI Mariotto, of Florence. B. 1474, d. 1515.

The Visitation. The two figures of the Holy Virgin and St. Elisabeth in the act of embracing each other stand out in the soft colour of a serene sky that is seen through the arch of a beautiful portico in the back-ground. Below is a Gradino with three small compositions by the same artist, representing the Annunciation, the Nativity and the Presentation.

This admirable work was executed in 1503 (this date is written in the back-ground) for the altar of the little church della Congrega dei Preti of St. Elisabeth. — It was taken to this Gallery in 1786. — On wood. Life size.

1255. RUSTICI Gio. Francesco, called il Rustichino, of Siena. Died 1636.

Painting and Poetry (Above half length). — On canvas. Life size.

1277. GHIRLANDAIO (Bigordi Rodolfo del).

Translation of the body of St. Zanobius, from the church of San Lorenzo to the Cathedral. The bier which contained the body of the Saint and was carried by some bishops, when passing near the church of St. John touched the branches of a dry tree which was then in that place and the plant instantly began to blossom. See N^r 1275. — On wood. Life size.

1278. VANNINI Ottavio, of Florence. Born 1585, d. 1643.

Herminia curing the wounds of Tancred. — On canvas. Life size.

1278 bis. VERROCCHIO (Andrea of Michele Cioni, called), of Florence; painter, sculptor and jeweller. B. 1435, d. 1488.

The Virgin on a throne with the infant Jesus. On both sides are St. John and St. Zanobius; kneeling St. Nicholas of Bari and St. Francis.

This painting was formely in the Convent of SS. Annunziata in Florence.

It is one of the finest specimens of old florentine art, and layed hidden and forgotten till 1881 in the store-rooms of the Royal Ufizi Gallery. Having then been discovered and examined by the members of the royal Commission of Art it was voted a painting of Verrocchio after comparing it with a similar one in the Academy of the Belle Arti (See verbal act of the Assembly of the 29th of may 1881). — On wood. Life size.

3436. BOTTICELLI (Alessandro Filipepi, called).

The adoration of the Magi. This picture, drawn and prepared « a chiaro-scuro » by the author, though, in the XVII century spoiled with colour by an unexpert hand, is nevertheles very interesting, being the composition of this (several times repeated subject) the most splendid composition ever made by Botticelli. — On wood. Dim. fig.

3452. LORENZO DI CREDI.

Venus. This beautiful figure, splendidly drawn, aside the Art's merit, is besides interesting for the other subject, differing completely to all the other subjects performed by Credi. — On wood. Dim fig.

(Third Hall).

1298. SIGNORELLI Luca, of Cortona. B. 1441, d. 1532.

Gradino, divided into three compartments: 1st The Annunciation; 2^d The Nativity; 3th The Adoration of the Magi. — Taken from the church of St. Lucie at Montepulciano. — On wood. Dim. fig.

CORRIDOR WHICH LEADS TO THE PALATINE GALLERY

This corridor was constructed by commission of Cosmus I, in order to join the Pitti Palace where he lived with the old palace of the Signoria or Palazzo Vecchio, where his son Francis was to dwell after his marriage with Jeanne of Austria. The celebrated architect and painter George Vasari was charged with the direction of this work, which he succeeded in finishing in five months, according to what he relates himself in his autobiography (Vol. I, p. 49, ed. Le Monnier).

Engravings.

In the first part of this corridor are exhibited since 1871 over 1200 engravings chosen from the collection of about 20,000 possessed by the Gallery, and also provening from the Medici house.

We shall only indicate how the collection is here ranged according to the different schools and epochs, as follows :

PORTRAITS

OF EMINENT PERSONAGES

The greatest number of these portraits were copied by Christopher Papi, called deli'Altissimo, by order of Cosmus I de' Medici, from a collection that Mons. Paul Giovio, bishop of Nocera, had made in his villa near Como. However not a few were added later on, so that it contains now not less than 533 pieces, which are arranged here in an alphabetical order and in several categories, according to their historical rather than artistic importance.
